New Ordinance Bans Local Cannabis Related Businesses

By Brian Simon

El Segundo won’t see any marijuana dispensaries or edibles shops opening up around town anytime soon, if ever. In a move to curb local commercial marijuana activity in the wake of California voters passing Proposition 64 last week, the El Segundo City Council on Tuesday night unanimously adopted an urgency ordinance to prohibit business licensing for any cannabis-related endeavors in the community. The item, added as a late special agenda by City Attorney Mark Hensley, required approval by 4/5 of the Council in order to proceed.

A second urgency ordinance aimed to prohibit permit issuances for marijuana-related land uses within El Segundo, but did not pass muster with Council members Mike Dugan and Carol Pirsztuk. “I don’t like telling people what they can do with their own land when they voted [with Prop 64] to say this is what they want to do with their property,” Dugan explained. The full Council then approved a revised version to allow growing in accordance to the State law.

Prop 64 legalizes the recreational use of marijuana in California, including commercial and residential cultivation. It allows delivery to homes, retail sales and personal possession of up to one ounce if one is 21 or older. Retail establishments won’t be able open until at least late 2017 as the State figures out licensing and regulations. Hensley noted that municipalities still have the authority to outlaw all activities except the ability of individuals to grow up to six plants inside their homes—which citizens can do now. With the revision to the second urgency ordinance, they can also grow outside, provided it occurs in a completely enclosed area (the same criterion dictated by the State).

The urgency ordinance allowed the Council to pass the item immediately. In case the move runs into any future legal challenge, the group will also vote in two weeks on a backup regular ordinance (which wouldn’t be able to officially go into effect for another month after that) that bans commercial marijuana activity.

Mayor Suzanne Fuentes issued a reminder that cannabis is still illegal under federal law. “It’s not where I want to see our City revenues coming from,” she remarked about potential tax dollars from marijuana sales.

Police Chief Mitch Tavera discussed the challenges of enforcement since legislators have not yet set any value (as there is with alcohol in the blood) to measure those driving under the influence of marijuana. For now, police officers determine if someone is too impaired to drive safely based on expertise and judgment. Mayor Pro Tem Drew Boyles emphasized the need to get the word out so that individuals don’t assume they can “drive high” and get a free pass.

Also on Tuesday as a follow-up to the item discussed on September 20, the Council by a 3-2 vote (with Fuentes and Dugan dissenting) opted to waive parking requirements for the El Segundo Museum of Art (ESMoA). While the museum itself couldn’t originally provide the necessary nine spaces per the size of the building, Chevron agreed to do so without compensation. The museum then opened in 2013 under the assumption the parking issue was handled—and the refinery has indeed supplied the spots ever since. However, Chevron lawyers were not willing to sign off on a City-mandated covenant (which has to be recorded with the County

Smoky Hollow Public Workshop Engages Community in Defining the Area

By Liz Spear

With about 44 interested community members in attendance, staff from consultant MIG in Pasadena recently took the audience at the second public Smoky Hollow Specific Plan Update Community Workshop through concepts addressing parking, traffic, sidewalks, bike lanes and buildings in the historical area of El Segundo. The meeting, held by the City of El Segundo, took place in the Council chambers at City Hall on November 3 and held true to its two-hour time limit. The workshop, designed for the City and MIG to get feedback on concepts in play for the area, allowed each person in attendance the option of using a “clicker” to vote for their preferred concept after MIG staff explained up to three concepts for areas in Smoky Hollow with detail on each plan.

With a large white screen in front of the audience and a computer that projected renderings, MIG team members walked the audience through design concepts for north/south streets, El Segundo Boulevard, Grand Avenue and Franklin Avenue—the four areas Smoky Hollow has been divided into for planning purposes.

Though audience members did vote on the concepts presented, they were also told not to assume that the options being presented “are a done deal” or “cooked,” said El Segundo City Manager Greg Carpenter. “By no means have we

The Marijuana Question: Where Do We Grow From Here?

By Rob McCarthy

The grass is greener in the state now that marijuana is legal for adults to use recreationally and to grow at home. Enterprising growers are lining up to get in on the action too, though it will take the State of California awhile to issue licenses.

Prop 64 decriminalizes small-scale consumption and cultivation of the leafy-green plant in the Golden State, but only for adults over 21. “The Marijuana Legalization Initiative Statute” was approved by 56 percent of voters statewide and by a slightly wider 58 percent margin in Los Angeles County.

The sea change of public opinion about legalizing marijuana appears to be less about personal choice and more about creating additional tax revenue for the state. While the days of buying it from a neighbor or a buddy aren’t going away with the passage of Prop 64, the State now has the authority to tax the sale of marijuana through licensed stores.

The State will tax marijuana growers - both medical and recreational - at a rate of $2.75 per ounce of dried leaves. Flowers will be taxed at a higher rate of $9.25 per ounce. Buyers will pay a 15 percent tax at a State-licensed outlet, and local governments can levy their own taxes too.

For many Californians, the tipping point for supporting Prop 64 was the new tax revenue for funding youth programs, environmental protection efforts and law enforcement. The path to victory for many, based on interviews, was the State’s own estimate that a regulated marijuana business could mean hundreds of millions of dollars - up to $1 billion per year - in new taxes.

State prisons could expect savings as marijuana possession and growing in small amounts was decriminalized. Federal law still classifies marijuana possession, cultivation and selling as a crime, though California’s new law could nudge the federal government to rethink that.

However, federally-chartered banks are forbidden from accepting cash from businesses that sell or grow pot. Legal pot growers are shut out of the banking system and must keep large sums of cash on the premises as a result. Or, they keep it off-premises for safekeeping.

The threat of robbery and violent crime might escalate as more pot growers and sellers get licensed. Medical marijuana dispensaries would benefit from a change in the federal banking laws, though there’s no word from Washington, D.C. about its position on legalizing marijuana.

The Department of Justice chooses not to prosecute more marijuana users and sellers as long as the latter follow state and local laws, California government officials say.

What Californians did last week was to commercialize marijuana too. It was a big business already because medical marijuana has been legal since 1996. Now, companies already in the medicinal side of the business can expand their growing and retail operations. One of those - Ocean Grown Extracts - is based here in the South Bay. The Manhattan Beach-based grower and supplier of marijuana-derived products for patients is reportedly looking to move into a vacant prison in Central California where it would grow marijuana and produce cannabis oil.

Ocean Grown Extracts makes and sells flavored oils and juice made from THC, the extract from marijuana plants that produces the euphoria or “high” that pain-patient advocates say relieves symptoms from chronic illnesses and late-stage cancer. Ocean Grown Extracts is a player in a California market that is reportedly the largest producer of marijuana in the nation.

While proponents of Prop 64 were collecting signatures to qualify the measure for the November 8 ballot, leaders in Sacramento were busy creating an agency to oversee California’s number one cash crop. The newly created Bureau of Medical Marijuana Regulation will create the system to license, regulate and tax the sale of all marijuana. The bureau has its work cut out because the commercial licensing of growers will start in 2018, though the agency could be ready sooner.

There are rules about recreational marijuana yet to be drafted, reviewed and approved, according to Lori Ajax, chief of the bureau that’s been in existence only since February. Public hearings will be held as part of the rulemaking process--giving citizens, local government officials, medical and child safety advocates a say in how the marijuana industry operates.

For now, it appears that marijuana-growing operations are looking at properties outside populated areas. Desert Hot Springs has created a pot-friendly business environment with passage of local ordinances there. In fact, the desert community near Palm Springs could become the “Silicon Valley of cultivation” of marijuana for use in California and in other states where it’s legal.

The Palm Desert City Council originally created its ordinance for the medical marijuana trade. The city allows growing operations and taxes them at $25 per square foot for the first 3,000 square feet, and a reduced $10 per-square-foot tax on additional commercial production space.

At least two growers have set up shop in Palm Desert, including Los Angeles-based Pineapple Express. Pineapple Express bought several acres of land in the community and warehouses to grow marijuana. The company’s vice president of business development credited the State for giving companies the green light to enter the marketplace before Prop 64 became law last week. “The legal cannabis industry is a reality,” said Teresa Flynn with Pineapple Express. The creation of the marijuana regulation agency means that legal commercial operators have guidelines to follow for the first time, she said.

plans to build California's first large-scale marijuana greenhouse in Desert Hot Springs, according to reports. CalCann Holdings will apply for a mega license and plans to hire 40 employees who will begin work in 2018. The operation will generate $400,000 in local taxes per year for Desert Hot Springs, the holding company estimates.

Will the smell of marijuana plants be wafting over South Bay cities and in the industrial areas anytime soon? Probably not because cities have the authority to ban the cultivation of marijuana within their borders. Homeowners can grow up to six marijuana plants for personal use under the newly approved law. However, growing outdoors can be banned in cities and unincorporated areas of Los Angeles County.

Numerous cities in California banned marijuana growing ahead of last week's statewide vote. With or without ordinances, many commercial building owners don't welcome marijuana-growing operations because of the lingering odors created even after the business closes down.

John Erickson, senior vice president with commercial property firm Colliers International, has fielded numerous inquiries over the past 20 years from medical marijuana companies looking for warehouse space. The answer he has given them time and time again is no. They bring too many problems, including odor and water damage from broken pipes, he said.

Still, a growers association thinks there could be 50,000 places available to grow marijuana within California. While the demand for space to grow will be high by 2018, the supply of available space in urban areas will remain low. Growers persuasive enough to sign a lease pay dearly for it too. They're renting space at higher-than-market rates, according to one commercial broker. Ron Berndt with Daum Commercial estimated that a pot business will pay $1.25 per square foot for a space that would normally rent for about 85 cents. The amount of power needed to grow the crop requires upgrades, which can take Edison six months to schedule and install, he said.

Growing outdoors remains illegal under the strict wording of Prop 64, which means that law enforcement will continue to monitor national forests and rural areas for illegal pot farms. Environmental protection - and cleaning up California's pot industry - seems to have been on the minds of voters this time around. A ballot measure to legalize pot failed in 2010.

Though public attitudes have softened about prosecuting minor crimes for selling and possessing marijuana, large-scale growing operations in national forests and on public land remain a concern. Law-enforcement officials say that pot farms in remote areas are a danger to fauna, wildlife and unsuspecting hikers who stumble across the illegal grows.

Prop 64 includes money for law enforcement. People convicted of marijuana crimes are eligible for immediate re-sentencing under the less-harsh Prop 64. Jail sentences could be shortened and marijuana offenders could petition to have a conviction removed from their records if, for example, their crime was possession of marijuana and the amount would be legal under the 2016 user-friendly version of the law. •

Nocturnal Animals is as Stylish and Seductive as its Director, Tom Ford

By Morgan Rojas for www.cinemacy.com

Leave it to Tom Ford, world-renowned fashion designer (fans include Beyoncé, Anne Hathaway, Bradley Cooper, Will Smith and Julianne Moore, to name a few), to create such a visceral and complexly beautiful follow-up to his directorial debut A Single Man with the sexy revenge thriller Nocturnal Animals. Basing the film on the novel Tony and Susan by Austin Wright, Ford proves that he can conquer yet another multi-million-dollar industry with the same grace and finesse that has earned him an elite status in the fashion world. With incredible expertise, Ford's meticulous eye picks up the minutiae of each character, giving the film a full-bodied story that makes it both an edge-of-your-seat thriller and also a breathtakingly gorgeous look-book.

Upon first glance, Susan Morrow (Amy Adams) seems to have it all: a handsome husband (Armie Hammer), a beautiful modern home in the Hollywood Hills, and a prestigious career as an art gallery owner. However, the look on her face reveals that she is not happy; her handsome husband leaves her in that beautiful home alone most nights as he travels for business and conducts affairs on the side. Her latest gallery installation seems to taunt her with the one thing she wants most: freedom. Unsatisfied with her situation, Susan perks up upon receiving a book manuscript from her ex-husband Edward Sheffield (Jake Gyllenhaal), titled Nocturnal Animals. The two haven't spoken in over 20 years, but the note Edward sends along with the book explains that he wanted Susan to read his novel first--as she was the source of inspiration. As Susan delves deeper into Edward's story of heartbreak and revenge, she is forced to re-confront the dark secrets she had buried away and the consequences of the past she tried to forget.

The intricacy of Nocturnal Animals, which won the Grand Jury Prize at the 2016 Venice International Film Festival, comes into play as Susan begins to read the manuscript. Ford creates a "story within a story" with the novel-creating the world of the book as written by Edward. Gyllenhaal also plays Edward's fictional character Tony Hastings, a married father of one. His wife, who is supposed to represent Susan in spirit, is Laura Hastings, played by Isla Fisher. Their daughter India (Ellie Bamber) completes this secular, fictional family. The scenes from the book's point of view have a contemporary Western feel both in the vibrant look (Ford shot on film) and character breakdown--including the malicious sociopath Ray Marcus, a phenomenally brutal performance by Aaron Taylor-Johnson; and the Southern-drawled antihero played by Michael Shannon, who balances the comedic and temperamental personality of his character, Officer Bobby Andes, just right. As the film jumps from the past to present to fiction, it finds strength in the depth of all of its characters, which fuels the cyclical motion of this layered story.

It's a well-known fact that silence commands attention, and Ford has mastered this art on screen. Adams exhibits more acting through her detailed movements and expressions than she does through verbal communication. Her performance is kept close to the chest, but is fully dramatic and confident nonetheless. Ford seems to find his comfort zone and subsequent directorial voice in this silence; he himself being a rather soft-spoken man. After watching his films, it's evident that they come from a personal place--not literal, per se, but an intimate origin.

For all of its glitz and glamour, Nocturnal Animals is at its core an introspective look at love, loss and loose ends. This isn't the type of film that leaves you restless at night, fearing that a creature is going to interfere with your life in some way. Rather it leaves you wanting more--a fuller resolution, a ghost on which to pin tension. Yet again, Tom Ford succeeds in leaving his audience with a topic of conversation to discuss after the film ends. The open-endedness could perhaps be looked at as questionable screenwriting, but personally I think it makes for one grand finale of emotional tension.

Nocturnal Animals is rated R for violence, menace, graphic nudity and language. 117 minutes. In select theaters on Friday, November 18. •

A Windy City Wish Come True

By Adam Serrao

When the Cleveland Indians took a 3-1 series lead in the World Series over the Chicago Cubs, most people thought, "Ah, that's just the Cubs, squandering another chance at a title." What happened after that, however, was a series of events for the record books. When all was said and done, the Cubs that everyone loved to give up on came back in the series, rattled off three straight wins and took a championship back home from Cleveland to Chicago. Most people thought that they would never see the day when the Cubs won the World Series. But 108 years later, it was written in the Major League Baseball history books.

No Billy Goat, Bartman, or black cat could stop the history that this year's Chicago Cubs were destined to write after a season in which the team won 103 regular season games--good enough for best in all of the MLB. The next best team in the entire league won eight less games than the Cubs, so you might even say that Chicago deserved its recently acquired championship ring. After 39,466 days of waiting, who wouldn't deserve it? Of course, when you beat the likes of the San Francisco Giants and Madison Bumgarner, the Los Angeles Dodgers and Clayton Kershaw, and the Cleveland Indians and Corey Kluber, there is certainly something to be said for a team that can now comfortably call itself the best in the world.

"Nothing's been easy, nothing's been given to us," Cubs ace Jon Lester explained of his team's heroics in this year's postseason. "Every series has been a battle and been a grind for us. We played three really good opponents to get here, and here we stand. It's an unbelievable feeling to be a part of this. You wouldn't expect it any other way." One might expect Lester to be the team's playoff MVP. The Cubs constantly leaned on him, even out of the bullpen, to pick them up on defense and get the team pointed back in the right direction. On offense, it happened to be a rather unlikely hero in Ben Zobrist.

Zobrist hit the go-ahead double in the 10th inning of Game 7 to break the tie and ultimately give his team the 8-7 victory over Cleveland in the deciding game. "I know he threw a pretty hard cutter," explained the player who was later named World Series MVP. "I just barely hung in there, and fortunately he put one just close enough to the plate where I could slap it down the line."

With that slap down the line, the curse of the Cubs was officially broken. Even though the team tried to add a bit more drama by giving a run back to the Indians in the bottom of the 10th, it was too little too late for Cleveland. The superior team battled back time and time again, and beyond simply the offense--or even simply the defense--it was the Cubs' team as a whole that won the World Series. For that reason, Chicago President of Baseball Operations Theo Epstein should be viewed as the real catalyst and most valuable person in the entire organization.

Epstein arrived in Chicago in 2011 after a 71-win season. He had just assisted in replenishing the Boston Red Sox's 86-year World Series drought. The Red Sox hadn't won the championship since 1918. With the help of Epstein, the team won in 2004 and 2007. Theo then brought his magical mind to Chicago to try to erase the league's longest-standing curse. After trading for Anthony Rizzo from the San Diego Padres and acquiring Kyle Hendricks from the Texas Rangers in 2012, Epstein traded with the Baltimore Orioles for Jake Arrieta and drafted Kris Bryant in 2013. He then acquired Addison Russell from the Oakland A's, hired Joe Madden as the manager and signed Jon Lester all in 2014, before acquiring Dexter Fowler and signing John Lackey, Zobrist and Jason Heyward in 2015. Finally, closer Aroldis Chapman was acquired from the New York Yankees in 2016. The result? A 2016 MLB championship.

With their victory, the Cubs became the first team to come back from a 3-1 deficit in the World Series to win Games 6 and 7 on the finished or reached any conclusions,” he told the audience.

Community members who didn’t make the meeting can take an online survey on the City website homepage to weigh in by November 30. The survey includes a link to the PowerPoint presentation delivered on November 3. Online survey responses received by November 15 will be included in the first result tabulation.

The last update to the Smoky Hollow Specific Plan was completed in 1986. The goal of the workshops is to create an updated plan that addresses present and future concerns in terms of the types of building uses allowed in the district, what the buildings presently look like, and how to create a more walkable and easier-to-move-in area.

Though the area remains fairly industrial, Smoky Hollow has become home to technology businesses and associated entrepreneurs in recent years, moving from its heavy association with aerospace to the renaissance it now enjoys. Many of the tech businesses and agencies have moved from the Westside or Venice to Smoky Hollow due to its funky, eclectic vibe. MIG staff noted that “great bones remain” in the district and that regional demand for office space, particularly in coastal areas, has shifted movement to Smoky Hollow.

During the November 3 meeting, MIG reported that findings from a technical study note differences between the east and west side of the district that spans from El Segundo Boulevard to the south, Sepulveda Boulevard on the east, nearly to Main Street on the west with a zig-zag pattern, and Grand Avenue on the north with another zig-zag pattern. MIG is known for its approach and focus “on planning, designing and sustaining environments that support human development.”

To that end, MIG staff discussed the benefits of wider sidewalks, one-way streets, loading lanes, bike lanes, cycle tracks, turning lanes, travel lanes, fewer lanes on El Segundo Boulevard and Grand Avenue, and perhaps closing some of Franklin Avenue to create a walk street. With parking identified as the top issue in Smoky Hollow at the first public workshop in March, MIG presented concepts that have the potential to add 186 public parking spaces.

For the north/south streets, the voters’ favorite option included angled parking and one-way streets with a travel/loading lane at 56 percent of the respondents. However, 31 percent voted to keep the north/south streets the way they are with 11 percent preferring for the concept to make the sidewalks wider. MIG staff told the audience why back-in parking is now the preferred method for angled parking—but in a straw vote, those present were 15 in favor of back-in and 14 in favor of head-in parking.

MIG staff noted that the north/south streets can’t be “painted with a broad brush” due to the positioning of driveways, saying that each block would have to be looked at more closely if those became one-way with angled parking added. They also pointed out that “no three streets in a row would go the same way” if one-way streets were adopted.

For El Segundo Boulevard, which borders the Chevron Refinery, the most popular concept was the one with the “cycle track,” which received 59 percent of the vote. That option calls for three traffic lanes—one in each direction and a turning lane in the center with a 10-foot cycle track on the southernmost side closest to Chevron. From the cycle track out into the roadway, there would be a curb, and then a travel lane, the center turning lane, another travel lane for those heading toward the ocean, and then a parking lane.

For the “chunk” of Grand Avenue in Smoky Hollow, the vote was closer on two concepts with 49 percent favoring three lanes (one going east, a turning lane in the center, and a lane going west) with parking and bike sharrows. Forty-six percent wanted to leave the road the way it is, with two lanes flowing in either direction, one of which parking is allowed in until peak hours. The three-lane concept that was slightly favored includes six-foot-wide sidewalks on both sides of the street, eight-foot parking lanes on both sides of the street, a 10-foot-wide travel lane with a bike sharrow on each side, and a 12-foot center turning lane.

Franklin Avenue, which has areas that are 40 feet wide and 50 feet wide, is the one section for which MIG proposes an “inclusive street,” which can have six-foot-wide sidewalks, parking lanes with room for a visually-appealing planter, and 11-foot multi-modal lanes in each direction.

During the meeting, many business and property owners from Smoky Hollow and El Segundo community members queried MIG staff about concept details and mentioned other issues they find irksome such as oversize vehicle parking in the district, cars being worked on at auto shops occupying street parking, skateboard traffic on Grand, and fast vehicle speeds. “People really fly down Grand,” said one audience member.

City staff responded by saying that the oversize vehicle parking issue will go before City Council in January and that the “enforcement issue” for auto shop customer cars occupying street parking spaces is “being worked on.” Parking permits were mentioned, as were paid metered parking and in-lieu parking fees paid by developers when a building doesn’t provide the required number of on-property parking spaces to meet City code. MIG staff noted that road diets contained in several of the concept plans should work at reducing vehicle speeds.

Those road diets, which include fewer traffic lanes on most streets if approved, are suitable for the district, said MIG staff, who noted that all intersections in Smoky Hollow received a C grade or above for Peak Hour Traffic Conditions in a 2015 study.

Building Floor Area Ratio (FAR) was lightly touched upon as the meeting neared conclusion. FAR is the key difference between the east and west portions of Smoky Hollow, with the east containing nearly all 1.0 FAR buildings and the east 0.6 FAR buildings. The audience voted equally at 24 percent to make all of Smoky Hollow a 1.0 FAR or to have no FAR. Having no FAR on the east and 0.6 on the west polled next at 21 percent. Keeping the existing FAR received 18 percent of the vote.

The City and MIG are moving toward a Specific Plan Draft and Environmental Impact Report, which the City would like to have by next summer at the latest. • road since the 1979 Pirates. For once, there will be no more talk of the 1945 team that lost the World Series to the Tigers. There won’t be any more talk of the ’84 team that lost in the NLCS to the Padres, or even the 2003 team that tragically lost it all in the NLCS to the Florida Marlins because of the infamous “Bartman game” (okay, people may still talk about that one). Now, the Cubs and their fans can talk about what they did do. “There’s no curses – there never was a curse,” said Cubs General Manager Jed Hoyer. “It’s about having the best team and playing well over seven games in a World Series, and we did that. Enjoy it. The Cubs are no different than any other team. When we’re the best team, we can win, and we were the best team.”

There certainly is something to be said about a team that had gone over a century without a championship. Almost everyone you know who enjoys and loves the game of baseball has a story about someone or maybe even knows someone who has been waiting their entire lifetime for a Cubs championship victory. Maybe that someone is even you. The team has been mocked, displayed in television shows and movies...and despite not winning, the Chicago Cubs have been one of the most popular and recognizable teams in the nation. Well, they are not the loveable losers any longer. The Chicago Cubs are the 2016 champions of Major League Baseball and with such a young group of core players, don’t expect them to go anywhere any time soon.

Want to Buy Your Dream Home for Less? Shop in Autumn and Winter

(BPT) - The long-held belief that summer is the only time to buy a home is fading fast. Savvy home-buyers are learning that when temperatures drop, numerous benefits emerge that simply aren't available other times of the year.

"With warm weather and many homes on the market, summer is generally the busiest real estate season. However, autumn into early winter can be opportune times for people who are serious about buying a home, too" says Geoff Lewis, RE/MAX, LLC President. "This time of year has big advantages - like motivated sellers and less competition - that simply can't be ignored."

If you're in the market to purchase a home, there's no need to hang up your house-hunting hat until spring or summer. Lewis offers eight reasons why now might just be the best time to purchase a home.

Year-End Tax Breaks

As long as you close on the property on or before Dec. 31, any property tax and mortgage interest paid are tax-deductible for that year. This can dramatically impact the amount of money you owe Uncle Sam, or increase your refund.

Less Competition

The National Association of Realtors(R) recently noted that, in an average year, nearly half of all home sales occur from May to August. Although most people wait until the hustle and bustle of the spring selling season, you'll likely encounter less competition during fall and winter. That means less stress and a reduced chance you'll be involved in a bidding war.

Eager Sellers

Sellers become more motivated the longer their home is on the market, especially now that the summer rush is over. If a home has been listed for a while, it may allow buyers more room for negotiation and potentially a better deal.

Quicker Transactions

Motivated sellers paired with less-busy title

companies may mean a faster closing in fall and winter. Do you want a new home in time for the holidays or new year? It's entirely possible when you house hunt now.

Cheaper Moving Prices

You're probably planning to hire a moving company in some capacity, whether you're moving across town or across the country. In the fall and winter moving companies tend to

Easier to Outfit Your Home

Need a new couch, cutlery or curtains for your home? Year-end sales are perfect for scoring a deal on these otherwise expensive items. Plus, if you move in around the holidays, there are plenty of deals on house-warming gifts.

"In addition to all these benefits for buying post-selling season, interest rates for home loans are still at record lows," says Lewis.

be less busy, which means you might have the options of more flexible schedules and lower prices.
