Court Delivers a Small Victory to Cities With Pension Troubles

By Rob McCarthy

The California Supreme Court has ruled against public-employee unions trying to win back a retirement benefit that allowed members to buy additional years of service toward retirement. The court, however, stopped short of giving cities and local governments new authority to deal with their rising pension costs.

State lawmakers followed the law when in 2012 they eliminated a retirement-boosting perk known as “air time” that the justices decided unanimously in a case brought by a state firefighters union. Employees before 2013 could buy up to five more years of service time toward retirement without working that long. Air time was eliminated as part of a mostly unsuccessful pension reform drive led by former Gov. Jerry Brown.

A 20-year veteran firefighter could retire with 25 years of service until air time was eliminated. CalFire, the union representing state firefighters, argued the buy-in option for additional service time was legally protected. The California Public Employees Retirement System countered that air time could be eliminated because it wasn’t compensation -- it was a voluntary option. CalPERS, which manages state employee pensions, won at trial and on appeal before California’s highest court accepted the case.

“The court said that just because you have an expectation doesn’t mean you’re going to get what you expect,” said Dan Pellissier, president of California Pension Reform. His group supports public pension reform, including the granddaddy of them all: letting state and local governments rework their pensions.

Neither side got everything it wanted from the California Supreme Court ruling, however. The justices left intact a different rule favored by the unions. That one, called “the California Rule,” was left untouched.

The California Rule protects the retirement benefits of public employees who’ve already started earning service time. The rule says retirement plans cannot be downgraded, and they can only be changed if the replacement benefits are better. Local governments facing millions of dollars in pension liabilities in future years were looking for some rule relief from the court in the CalFire case.

However, the justices limited their attention in the case to the union’s loss of air time and saw no need to revisit the California Rule. The non-decision leaves local cities and agencies on the hook for retirement benefits to former employees and current ones whose benefits can’t be reduced.

Ted Toppin, chairman of Californians for Retirement Security, said the decision against air time wasn’t unexpected. “More importantly, the Supreme Court leaves intact the California Rule,” he said. His group backed CalFire’s arguments with court briefs and said it accepted the justices’ mixed decision in the highly watched case.

Starting in 2003, many public employees could buy up to five years of service credit by making payments to their pension fund. Ten years later, the Legislature approved the 2013 Public Employees Pension Reform Act and eliminated the opportunity for public employees to purchase additional retirement service credit, or ARS. Unions said the pension reform was unconstitutional.

CalFire reached the state Supreme Court after losing on appeal in a lower court. Chief Justice Tani Gorre Cantil-Sakauye wrote the new opinion, which was unanimous, that concluded “the opportunity to purchase ARS credit was not a right.” Reading the law that created the ARS option convinced the justices it was a perk rather than compensation promised to employee who retired. “Unlike core pension rights, the opportunity to purchase ARS credit was not granted to public employees as deferred compensation for their work,” the chief justice wrote.

The limited ruling in the public-employee pension case, which favored state, county and local governments, stopped the state’s justices from reinterpreting the California Rule, the chief justice explained. CalPERS and state elected officials, including former Gov. Brown, had argued for a re-examination of the rule as financial pressures mount on them to pay the benefits of retirees who are outliving their counterparts from the early 1980s by a full five years.

The average life expectancy of Americans has reached 78 years, based on 2016 data. Men can expect to live to 76 years, compared to 70 years in 1980 when today’s longest-tenured retirees were hired. For women, the current average is 81 years, compared to 76 years back in the ‘80s.

The California Supreme Court’s ruling got mixed reviews from unions and taxpayer groups, including the Howard Jarvis Taxpayers Association. The group is best known for getting Prop. 13 passed and capping property tax increases at 2 percent per year.

President Jon Coupal observed how reactions to the CalFire decision were divided. Two conservative groups differed over whether

Meow! My Groovy Life with Tiger Beat's Teen Idols by Ann Moses with Ann Wicker

By Roz Templin, Library Assistant, El Segundo Public Library

How many of you remember teen idols? Is that even a thing anymore? Frank Sinatra made his Bobbysoxers swoon, Elvis made teenage girls' hearts beat faster and the British Invasion brought the hysteria of fans screaming for the Beatles, the Rolling Stones and other UK bands of the era.

Ann Moses writes about her days working at Tiger Beat, the biggest teen fan magazine of the 1960s and 1970s. Her memories include going on tour with Paul Revere and the Raiders, watching the Monkees film their TV show, eating lunch with Bobby Sherman and cooking dinner for the Osmonds in her home. When she visited England, she was picked up at the airport by Maurice Gibb of the BeeGees in a borrowed Rolls Royce belonging to John Lennon.

While reading Meow (Ann had a column in Tiger Beat by that name), I was swept away by my own memories of fandom: I remember being glued to the TV screen by The Monkees, American Bandstand and Where the Action Is. I bought every issue of Tiger Beat and their large family of other printed products. I had posters of Donny Osmond, David Cassidy and the Hudson Brothers on the walls of my room and I collected every kind of memorabilia you can think of from the popular culture of those times. Ann's book is like a conversation instead of a tell-all as she reminisces about her friendships with the stars, but always acknowledges that the fans were the most important part of her job. She says that she tried to put herself in every teenage girl's fantasy when she interviewed her dreamy subjects and she was careful to be respectful of whom she was talking with, too. There were no scandalous tales or mean gossip -- just innocent photos of actors and singers with their families and pets.

Even though I was one of those girls who wished I was in Ann's place, I discovered in her book things I never knew before. Ann tells how she got her start by interning at Tiger Beat while she was studying journalism at a junior college in Fullerton. She wrote for a weekly music newspaper called Rhythm 'n' News and covered stars like James Brown, Wilson Pickett and Sam Cooke. She met Derek Taylor, the former press officer for the Beatles, when he headed his own public relations firm representing the Beach Boys, The Byrds and other acts. Derek wrote a column in Tiger Beat, so Ann boldly asked him to arrange an introduction to the magazine's publisher. The rest is history.

Meow is full of fun facts and recollections that are funny and also full of heartache. Ann Moses was once the envy of just about every teenage girl once upon a time. Join her in the retelling of her own story.

Film Review

Ash Is Purest White Review: No Good Deed Goes Unpunished

Morgan Rojas for www.cinemacy.com

A poetic romance that transcends time, Ash Is Purest White tells a love story that doesn't play by the rules. Written and directed by Jia Zhang-Ke, the film is a tribute to the lengths one will go in order to reclaim a past relationship despite the intangible longing of a love that has been lost.

Qiao (Tao Zhao) is in love with the local "jianghu" (mafia) boss Bin (Fan Liao), even though he is hesitant to put a label on their relationship. One night, a mysterious murder in the group's inner circle puts everyone on edge, as the town's rival gang appears to be sending threats. That threat becomes personal of strangers to the Village People's YMCA, gives off strong Pulp Fiction vibes. Ballroom dancers at a funeral and a UFO sighting are other nuanced touches that director Zhang-Ke also incorporates. Visually, Ash Is Purest White is drenched in the naturalistic beauty of the northwestern Chinese region where it looks as if every frame is a painting. The greenery of the hills juxtaposed with the neon vibrancy of city aesthetic breathes life into the tepid relationship we see on screen. The film also does a wonderful job of indicating that time is passing without relying on title cards or other obvious methods. We see our characters age through their wardrobe, when a group of boys catch Bin off-guard and begin beating him in the middle of a busy street. Qiao, whose initial reaction of shock quickly turns into controlled rage, pulls out a gun -- the gun that Bin gave her days prior -- and shoots it up into the air as a warning. The rival group scatters, but unfortunately for our heroine, Qiao, she gets arrested for owning and discharging an illegal firearm.

Fast-forward five years, Qiao is finally released from prison and begins her search for Bin in the hopes to pick things up where they left off. The fact that Bin never came to visit her in prison and now is not answering his phone makes her nervous. When Qiao finally tracks Bin down, his selfishness dumbfounds her. Not only does he have a new girlfriend, despite Qiao's sacrifice to save his life, but his feelings for her have also clearly changed. He doesn't love her anymore, and for Qiao, that reality is the equivalent of a slap in the face. She now realizes that her whole adult life, she had been a prisoner in both the literal sense and also figuratively as a pawn in a non-committed relationship that had no future.

Almost Lynchian at times, Ash Is Purest White incorporates surrealist moments that serve to shake up the film's otherwise natural sensibilities. The dance club scene early on, in which Qiao and Bin dance with a group hairstyles and the continuous upgrades in the technology of the times.

Ash Is Purest White is a film about life, love and freedom where coming into one's own can be an ambiguous and anxiety-ridden journey. Qiao learns this the long and hard way as she discovers that she must live her life for no one other than herself. It's a lesson about self-discovery that's not only important, but clearly timeless.

Ash Is Purest White is not rated. 136 minutes. Now Playing at ArcLight Hollywood and Laemmle Monica Film Center. •

Op-Ed

Who Belongs in College?

By Brock Walsh

Next month I'll board a redeye with 50 high school juniors from South Los Angeles, beginning a nine-day trip to 10 East Coast colleges. There, these new recruits to our non-profit, College Match, will try to picture themselves among the incoming freshmen. They are all high-achieving, low-income, first-generation kids of color. The hyphenates, as one student put it. Superheroes, I say.

The recent admissions bribery scandal won't be on their minds, I suspect. Their worry is something different -- impostor syndrome: that even if accepted by one of the elite institutions we visit, they will eventually be outed as frauds by their more affluent and predominantly white classmates. Despite their being every bit as smart and arguably more resilient, it's a fear that nags at nearly every student in our program. By the time these juniors begin college in the fall of 2020, I worry that time will have erased any memory of Hollywood celebrities buying spots in the freshman class. It will once again be minority students at whom fingers are pointed for being undeserving. Business as usual.

Four years ago, as an admissions officer at Harvard College, I was tasked with reading applications from schools all over Los Angeles, public and private. I read essays from the children of affluent west-siders and the children of East LA housekeepers and gardeners, kids very much like the ones I now counsel. Given the ever-increasing number of applications, the odds of admission were abysmally low and remain so. However, a few amazing candidates, from the east side and west, were offered spots. And each year a few were students from College Match. I vowed to myself to keep an eye on the admitted first-gen kids (I'd been one myself 40 years before), meeting them for coffee or a walk on the Cambridge Common. The transition can be difficult and they appreciated our conversations. Maybe as much as I did. But without exception, they struggled with a persistent fear that they were looked upon as impostors. With time, and some real effort from the university, they grew in confidence. They would succeed and graduate. But the fear never left them.

In 2015, my wife and I returned to Santa Monica and I joined College Match. I loved working in college admissions, but find the closer connection with students more to my liking. Playing some small part in their success is a bit like witnessing the miracle of flight.

I joined a dozen dedicated counselors, each assigned to one or more of 31 schools in South LA. There we guide students through the admissions process and provide SAT prep they would otherwise find unaffordable. From early on, we encourage them as writers to express themselves honestly and clearly, to permit themselves to dream extravagantly. Then we push them hard.

It's a testament to the durability of dreams that they dream at all. Their schools are located in some of Los Angeles' bleakest neighborhoods. Their stories reveal that they have already lived through more hardship and abuse than most people will endure in a lifetime. And yet dream they do.

If only we can get them to feel like they deserve it. It can take a long time. Our organization is led by Erica Rosales. Born in East LA, she attended Wellesley before the use of hyphens became the norm. The combination of her pluck and pure luck put her in contact with a Wellesley rep and, just months later, she flew on an airplane for the first time. She made the journey, and the transition to college, completely on her own. Her parents saw the campus exactly once, at her graduation. When she speaks to parents and students, she tells her story without embellishment because it needs none. She returned to East LA, becoming the community organizer she set out to be years before. She started a school. And today she's executive director of the program founded in 2003 by Harley Frankel, who after leading the head start program, saw an uneven playing field for minority students and started leveling it. But she admits she was not immune from the same self-doubt that besets our current students.

When we can provide deserving kids with the opportunities enjoyed by more affluent students, they can achieve whatever they set out to do. Our College Match alumni have proven it. They are now full-time professionals: doctors, lawyers, community organizers and teachers. And each year as we graduate another class of Wonder Women and X Men, they come back to the banquet room at Luminarias in Monterey Park to deliver a message: You belong. You deserve it. Believe it.

Brock Walsh is a senior college counselor at College Match in Los Angeles, CA. He is also a former songwriter and admissions officer at Harvard College. •

The banquet will be held over at the Ayres Hotel and it looks to be a good evening to celebrate Hawthorne. More information will be forthcoming.

WHY? WHY NOT?

I made it down to Hawthorne this past weekend, saw a lot of friends, ate a few pancakes, played a round of golf, enjoyed the sunny weather, walked six miles down on the Strand, got stuck in traffic, had breakfast at Piggies, and of course enjoyed a cold one or two with my brewery owner friend from church. I also heard that there are a few of you who question why I still write this column. A few comments: "He doesn't even live in Hawthorne". "All he talks about is beer and God". "He doesn't proooooof read his writing". Whoever you are that called the City Clerk’s office to complain is correct in raising that question, WHY? Why do I do this? All I can say it is because I enjoy “bonding” with my readers. I try to write my simple thoughts and maybe sometimes it’s the same thoughts you have had. I must be somewhat entertaining for several people to say that they enjoy reading this stuff. They tell me to keep it up. So, why not? Why not encourage people to relax, enjoy life, have a cold one, solve all of their problems with a few swigs, drown all of their guilt away, let the good times roll, let their suds overflow but please don’t slip on the wet floor. I am not City Clerk any more. I don’t speak for the City. I have nothing to lose. I can say whatever I want. If you don’t like it, then you need to chill. Free speech, freedom of the press, free newspapers, I’m free. Free indeed. Thank God I’m free. So, I have one loyal reader who hates me. Okay, from now on I’ll have to keep track of haters, toleraters, amusement seekers and the poor people who read my stuff out of desperation. I don’t care why you read it, I say, Why not?

Hawthorne Happenings

MY POOR OL’ LADY

Some of you heard that my ol’ lady fell while roller skating and broke her wrist. She fell hard on her tailbone. For once I’m not the cause of the pain in her rear end. Following surgery, she is gradually recovering.
