Residents Ask Council to Extend the Moratorium on Rent Control

By Haleemon Anderson

City Manager Artie Fields reported on the moratorium on rent increases at Tuesday’s meeting of the Inglewood City Council, ultimately telling the Council that staff would need more time. The freeze on excessive rent hikes and evictions banned area landlords from increasing rents by more than five percent. “More time is needed to complete the review,” said Fields. “Staff will return on the 16th with its findings, but may ask the Council for more time to complete the report.” Fields noted the March 5 action by the Council required staff to study the issue and report on their findings. Fields said he is in the process of reviewing several rent stabilization ordinances from around the state. Mayor James T. Butts acknowledged the 30-day report is required in the moratorium ordinance. Councilmember Alex Padilla said the rent moratorium is a very involved situation. “It impacts so many folks,” he said. Councilmember Ralph Franklin said he and his colleagues need to take a balanced approach to the rent situation. “We are looking to make this a win-win situation,” he said. Councilmember Eloy Morales said any rent control plan is not going to be perfect. He asked that community residents send as much information as they have, including documentation on evictions and proposed hikes. “We have to create a balance that works with the issue. It’s going to be a passionate issue all the way through,” said Morales. “When we develop a plan that addresses as many people as possible, we’re still going to miss some. We won’t find a perfect solution.” In public comments, several residents implored the Council to include them in the process. Derek Steele, representative with Uplift Inglewood Coalition (UIC), said, “We are 17 days away from the end of the 45-day. “We are still eagerly waiting. We hope there is citizen representation.” Steele said he sent emails to all the Council members. Tiffany Wallace, describing herself as a long-time resident, said “We need not just a moratorium, but comprehensive, long-term and permanent rent control.” Wallace added that with 60 percent of Inglewood residents being renters, rent control will help the economy in Inglewood. “You can set the example by taking measures to protect the residents,” she said. Yvonne, an organizer with LA Voice, said she works with several area churches. As a representative of the faith-based community, she asked that the Council extend the moratorium. Jelani Hendrix, an organizer with UIC, said there’s a lot of frustration among those who are advocating for renters. “I speak for the entire coalition when I say we want to be a part of the solution,” he said. Hendrix also reported that he emailed the Council members, asking for a response. “We would like to meet with you. We have an opportunity to be a leader and implement comprehensive rent solutions.” Frances Taylor said she received an eviction notice. Mayor Butts responded that anyone has the recourse to go to court and answer an eviction. “We are looking for a solution that protects not only renters, but the people who provide housing,” he said. “This is a multi-layered situation. It requires a thoughtful development of public policy.” Resident Willie Agee pointed out that the Council represents 115,000 people. “You have to listen to all of them,” he said. Agee added that he approves of the Council and believes rent control advocates may be backed by Madison Square Garden. A woman who identified herself as a property owner advocated for renters. “People who rent are not second-class citizens,” she said. She also noted that 60 percent of Inglewood voters were in favor of rent stabilization in the November general election. “Those people’s opinions have to be taken into account as well.” In other action, the Council approved an agreement with St. Mary’s Academy for use of the school’s running track for the Inglewood Youth Track and Field program. The Academy currently uses city facilities for softball and soccer practice and games. The reciprocal agreement will give the track program a specialized track better suited to training for competitive meets. The Council additionally approved a payment of $33,000 to the California Cities for Self-Reliance Joint Powers Authority. The advocacy group represents several area cities where gaming and card clubs face possible restrictions on blackjack-style card games and certain player and dealer-related positions. Member cities agreed to pay the assessment fee specifically to hire a lobbyist and consultant to address restrictions proposed by the Bureau of Gambling Control. According to the Council’s report, if enacted, the proposed limits would have a “direct effect on the $6 million in card club revenues annually received from Hollywood Park Casino.” Padilla announced a pet clinic to be held April 14 at the District 2 Community Center. Any Inglewood resident may bring pets for vaccines and microchipping services. The Inglewood City Council meets every Tuesday, unless otherwise noted, at 2 p.m. in the Council chambers on the 9th floor, Inglewood City Hall. •

The Lucifer Chord by F.G. Cottam

Reviewed by Roz Templin, Library Assistant, El Segundo Public Library

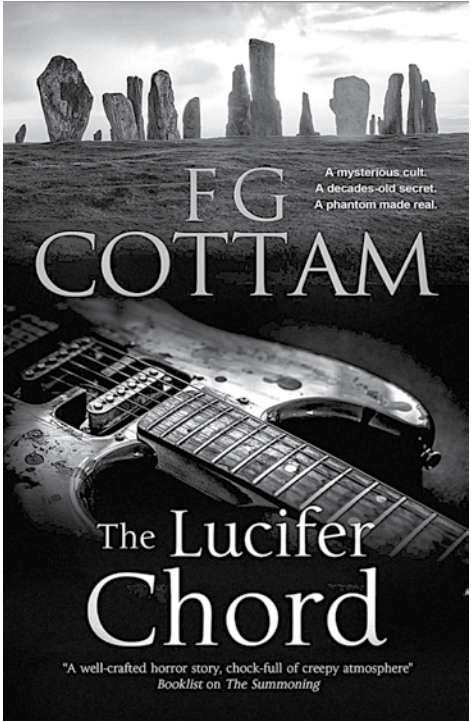

I have always been intrigued by the unknown. I have grown up watching “scary” movies, both theatrically and on television. But, one of the ways to truly experience terror is to read about it as written by a talented and subtle author. The images in your mind can be much more frightening than those on the screen.

F.G. Cottam is one of the few writers who understands the ghost story. He also understands character, dialogue and mood. He orchestrating the resurrection of Martin Mear and his bandmates. He puts her in touch with several people who knew Martin, including his lover and his daughter. There’s even a psychic medium who foretells eerie circumstances that will cause Ruthie’s research to turn into dangerous territory. There’s more to the story of Martin Mears and company: His diehard fans are convinced they can bring him back by means of a ritual they will perform, known as “The Clamouring,” which is an experience Ruthie wishes she could forget.

Cottam reveals on his website that The Lucifer Chord “...provided me with the most enjoyable writing experience of my entire life.” I think that translates into the enjoyment one feels in the reading of his story. Horror tales don’t necessarily have to drip with gore for one to get the message. A reader can still imagine a cold draft or a shadow in the hall of a decrepit mansion and feel a frisson of terror. The description of a tune from the 1920s coming from an unused (and perhaps broken) gramophone in the rotting Fischer House was lodged in my mind for a while -- as well as the accompanying disembodied voice addressing Ruthie as she explores the ruins.

F.G. Cottam favorably compares with another favorite author, Phil Rickman. Both are based in the UK and Rickman was known for a series of ghostly novels that told of ley lines and Celtic legend that blooms into dread and fear. In fact, Rickman wrote a “rock & roll horror story” of his own called December, which is an unforgettable book. I wonder if Cottam was influenced by Phil Rickman. Read The Lucifer Chord and if you like that, you might want to try December. We offer interlibrary loan services for books owned by other libraries so you can explore more otherworldly tales. • doesn’t condescend to his audience. Instead, he invites them in quietly. Before you know it, you’re hooked and you find yourself looking over your shoulder! I discovered him through his book The House of Lost Souls, which is a great introduction into his work.

In The Lucifer Chord, he finds a new twist in the mixing of the supernatural with rock music. Ruthie Gillespie is hired to write the liner notes to the upcoming remastered special edition recordings of ‘70s legends Ghost Legion, led by the late guitarist Martin Mear, who died mysteriously. In fact, members of the group are all dead, and questions keep popping up about them and a strange cult-like group called the Jericho Society. Is there a connection? Was Martin Mear involved in a Faustian deal -- fame that came with a deadly price?

Cottam has a light touch when chronicling Ruthie’s meetings with Carter Melville, Ghost Legion’s former manager and the Big Man

Native Son Review: A Classic Gets a Modern Punk Adaptation

By Ryan Rojas for www.cinemacy.com

Native Son is the story of a young African American from low-income circumstances, who, after securing employment in the world of a wealthy white family, finds himself at the center of an accidental death that puts him directly in the crosshairs of cultural tensions. Adapted from the classic 1940 novel, first-time feature film director Rashid Johnson (along with Pulitzer Prize-winning screenwriter Suzan-Lori Parks) has made this updated version entirely his own: by highlighting the story’s underlying social Dalton (an always impressive Bill Camp). They, along with the rest of the actors, are so perfectly cast together that – to put it in art terms – it feels like the right mixture of harmonious colors in Johnson’s artistic palette.

It’s undeniable that Rashid Johnson is a flourishing artist and one whom we should all be watching to see what he does next. The biggest obstacle holding Native Son back from being even more impactful is in the tonal shift jumps, which happen when the story continues to play on and the stakes are raised. The story’s pivotal and climactic plot issues and wrapping them up in a polished punk aesthetic.

Visual contemporary artist Rashid Johnson’s previous work is diverse in mediums such as painting and sculpting. With Native Son, he brings an experienced visual eye to the project, which is the film’s most seductive and impactful quality. Where Johnson most noticeably swerves from the source novel is in the depiction of our protagonist, Bigger (Ashton Sanders), or “Big,” as the neighborhood calls him. With his cropped green buzz cut and decorated leather jacket, Big is the epitome of visual identity exploded. He challenges both personal and racial expectations of what “blackness” should be by listening to such diverse and non-hip-hop music as Bad Brains and Beethoven. You’ll remember Ashton Sanders as teenage Chiron from last year’s Best Picture winner Moonlight, and here again, Sanders plays a cryptically reserved character. But as he slinks his way around the streets of North Chicago, he brings a new level of magnetism and menace to his acting range.

KiKi Lane, who most recently gained name recognition by starring in the acclaimed If Beale Street Could Talk, plays Big’s girlfriend Bessie. Nick Robinson plays Jan, an impoverished young activist; and the captivating Margaret Qualley plays Mary Dalton, the alluring daughter of Big’s new employer, Mr.

point is surprising, but this hard crank of the wheel feels a bit disorienting. The fallout of this moment leads the movie to make a statement that we didn’t know it would have to make. Yet for this slight distraction, it would be wrong to not also acknowledge the number of complex ideas, all stylized through Johnson’s artistic formats.

Native Son is well worth the 104 minute investment. It’s no wonder why HBO bought the film from A24 just hours before making its world premiere at the Sundance festival.

Native Son will be available to stream on HBO on Saturday April 6. •

News for the City of Good Neighbors from an Old Guy Named Norb Huber

UNPLANNED

Me and my ol’ lady don’t go to too many movies these days but when I am told that a movie has a really deep Christian message then I am more inclined to check it out. We checked the listings and found our movie playing at a nearby theater for the senior bargain rate of $5.50. “Unplanned”, the movie, is the story of a woman who becomes a director of a Planned Parenthood clinic despite the disapproval of all of her family. She became the best director she possible could become, even winning an “employee of the year award”. But, after seeing an actual act of sucking an embryo out of a mother’s womb she decided that the whole procedure was too much for her. She could not continue to lie to clients about how quick and easy the procedure was. The question is and always has been, “When does life begin?” If you are prolife then you believe that it begins at conception. Then if that little embryo has life, then ending it is killing. However, on the other side, if the little blob inside is just tissue matter then disposing of this non-human is the easy way out of taking responsibility for the child. Recently, the states of New York and Virginia have authorized late term terminations. How can anyone say that the baby at this stage is not alive, not a human? There is a bill introduced in Congress called the “Sanctity of Human Life Act”. Part of it reads as follows: “the life of each human being begins with fertilization, cloning, or its functional equivalent, irrespective of sex, health, function or disability, defect, stage of biological development, or condition of dependency, at which time every human being shall have all the legal and constitutional attributes and privileges of personhood” This bill will not pass Congress. Watchdog predictions give it a 5% chance of passing. God gives life, we are to respect and protect all humans, inside the womb or out. I fully understand why a young woman would consider abortion. There are other options available. I believe that abortion is wrong. Does God forgive the woman for ending a pregnancy? Yes. Can God take her guilt away? Yes. God is full of mercy. God forgives.

Wiseburn Board Views Anza STEAM Presentation

By Duane Plank

Anza Elementary Principal Alberto Paredes and Anza instructor Suzanne Guidi were front and center at last Thursday’s meeting of the Wiseburn School Board, extolling the virtues of their school’s Science, Technology, Engineering, Arts and Math (STEAM) program.

Their presentation began with a slide showing how the Anza Elementary mission statement dovetails with that of the Wiseburn Unified School District (WUSD) as well as the California Science Framework. The WUSD mission statement touts that students will acquire the necessary skills to become “capable lifelong learners and productive citizens.” Anza’s mission statement aims to help students with developing a “positive self-image, achieve academic excellence and become responsible citizens.” The California Science standards stress the need for students to become “informed citizens and future scientists.

As the presentation continued, it noted the goal to achieve “anytime, anywhere collaboration” for teachers and students, utilizing all tech options to support high-level instruction and implement personalized learning strategies.”

Stakeholder interactions were briefly detailed, with the delineation of the “mystery science” license that was on-boarded in the fall of 2018, allowing students to explore “ready-made” science mysteries. Project Lead the Way training was noted, with a dozen Anza teachers taking part in the recent District-wide professional development training opportunity.

The presentation concluded with Anza Elementary Engineering lessons and the import of Arts learning to the program, as well as “coding” opportunities that are being made available at Wiseburn.

Upcoming Anza Elementary events include the April 10 Open House, the April 25 Family Math Night and the May 21 Around-the-World Multi-Cultural Night.

Paredes talked about educational “flashlights” aimed specifically at the STEAM program, and action plans to make the program a success. “But we didn’t stop there,” he said. He talked of development of the action plan, and how all District stakeholders were given a chance to be involved, making sure “everything was connected, so that we can move in the right path.”

Guidi, in her comments, spoke about the focus of the “flashlight” and how she realized that she needed to be in-tune to the necessity to incorporate all stakeholders’ inputs to make the program successful. She also noted the import of taking the time to listen and learn, pointing out the strong core of teachers currently working at Anza.

She, as well as Paredes, fully embraced the “Ok to fail,” mantra, deemed “fail forward,” which encourages students to not be afraid to espouse an idea that may not be currently feasible, but “as long as you find something that you learned and moved forward, that was success.” Paredes spoke of the benefits of “failing forward,” which he said allows students to “revise” their thinking and postulations.

Superintendent Dr. Blake Silvers lauded the efforts being made at Anza to integrate STEAM into the curriculum. He spoke of the “phenomenal work at Anza” and the District-wide embracement of “working through challenging tasks, and to fail forward,” noting how these lessons will be integral to how students will learn to operate in their future endeavors.

Silvers said Guidi has taken on a leadership role at Anza, tasking students with solving tech-related conundrums. “She has been awesome, with her commitment to tech,” he said, adding that she helps students to be bold enough to make mistakes and learn from those.

Siobhan Scott of Wiseburn Watch next addressed the Board, citing her concerns about the need for a proposed District traffic light on Douglas Street where, she said, multiple accidents have occurred. She also mentioned the dearth of baseball fields available in the District. “We don’t have one,” she said, speaking of any baseball field.

Board reports followed, with Dr. Neil Goldman touting the work of the Wiseburn Education Foundation. Vice President Roger Banuelos recognized District retiring teachers, adding that he was also heartened to see the involvement of young ladies in the STEAM program that indicates a “broader culture of inclusion.”

In her comments, Board President JoAnne Kaneda was “disturbed” by District retirements, but thanked the retirees for their years of service and how their work has been so valuable.

During his comments, Silvers shared that he was happy to attend the recent Anza Elementary Variety Show. He also spoke of the recent State of the City with El Segundo, and the fact that he was looking forward to his stint in the dunk tank at the April 6 Rock Around the Block festivities.

At the tail-end of the 55-minute meeting, the District honored retiring long-time employee Edgar Sanchez after 23 years of service. He worked in multiple positions with Wiseburn’s maintenance division. He saves the day,” Silvers said. “He goes out there always, with a smile. One of those go-to-guys who takes pride in what he does.

A wonderful human being...”
District resignations on the agenda included teachers Mary Nies and Karen Rafalski-Fraser. Silvers said their resignations were a “great loss to the District.” Noting how he had personally worked with Nies, he called her “an incredible person, innovative, forward-thinking and intuitive. She is such a model and tech guru, helping to bring the District into the 21st Century.”
In other news, Silvers reported his attendance at the Anza Elementary Variety Show and that he was blown away with the talents that he saw demonstrated during the program. He said that there is a “mission of community-building and engagement at Anza.” He added that the recent event was very-well attended with students, families and friends of the Anza community taking time out to support the show. He gave kudos to the Anza staff who had worked diligently to make the evening a success, citing their “unwavering commitment to the students and the tremendous amount of work that went into this event.”

Silvers reiterated that while the students’ talents were top-notch, the ending routine by Anza staff “stole the show.” He said, “It really goes to show how schools are more than content being taught, but rather places for people to feel connected and recognized as part of a greater community.”
And on April 6, the always popular Rock Around the Block activities will commence, anchored at Dana Middle School. Activities will include student musical performances, a petting zoo, silent auctions and other activities benefiting WUSD through the largesse of the Wiseburn Education Foundation.
The next regularly scheduled Wiseburn School Board meeting is calendared for Thursday evening, April 11. •
