Renters Can Rest Easy as Council Passes a Protective Ordinance

By Haleemon Anderson

Inglewood adopted a sweeping housing initiative at Tuesday's City Council meeting, coming down squarely on the side of renters after a pitched battle that raged for months -- pitting the interests of landlords against tenants and dredging up issues of gentrification, demographic changes and who belongs in the community.

Coming after an emergency 45-day moratorium on rent increases, the current action extends the moratorium for an additional 60 days and precedes a draft ordinance process that will cement even more protections for tenants.

Council directed the City Attorney's office to begin drafting a code to limit rent increases to once in 12 months. Other aspects include limiting increases to between 4 and 8 percent and establishing a relocation allowance program for tenants hit with increases of more than 4 percent.

A standing-room-only crowd gathered early for the proceedings and an overflow room was opened on the first floor of City Hall. Tenants and landlords both were on hand for public comments. While renters were generally positive about the measure, property owners took a more measured approach.

Tim Christianson said his family has owned rental property in the city for three decades. "Our rents are 40 percent lower than average," he said. Restrictions on rent increases could be critical, he explained. "The only alternative would be to sell to an investor who would do the same thing they are talking about."

Olicia Stewart said she has been the owner and property manager at her building since 1995. She said restrictions on raising rents can keep her from making needed repairs.

John Nemeth said he considered buying property in Inglewood, but is still undecided. "Rent control is detrimental to property owners," said Nemeth.

Long-time resident LaRon Smith said he attended Inglewood schools. At 22 years old, he bought his first property in the 90303 area code. "I understand both sides of the argument," said Smith. "We need to find a realistic, happy medium."

Senator Rod Wright, a property owner in the rental business for 43 years, said the current discussions on rent control are "a one-way street." "If you take from the property owner, what does [he] get in return?" asked Wright. Wright suggested forming a committee of owners who have something to lose and tenants who have something to gain.

A woman who identified herself as Angela said she has owned property near the Darby Park-Dixon area since 1980. She said her concern is the Council's desire to impose relocation fees on owners when tenants move due to rent increases. She said landlords have not forgotten their social responsibility.

Jorge Rivera, from Tents Together noted that the advocacy group works on behalf of residents and organizations. "Thank you for considering rent stabilization," said Rivera. "That will keep people in their homes." He said he hopes the City will adopt rent control.

The Council's action to protect renters stops short of rent control. Citing a study done by Stanford University, Mayor James Butts, Jr. described a scenario where, under rent control, landlords eventually reduce rental units and convert to condos. Butts cited this trend as the cause of gentrification.

Jelani Hendrix said the 8 percent increase allowed in the draft ordinance is too high. Hendrix, a resident and organizer with vocal advocacy group Uplift Inglewood Coalition, is a consistent presence at meetings to discuss housing in Inglewood. "This is a manmade problem and it can be fixed," said Hendrix. "We can't displace people in the name of projects." Mayor Butts responded to both concerns, saying the Council's action will be a buffer between the capitalist economy and the needs of the people.

Stewart Bailey, a city volunteer, announced the Earth Day Music Festival Saturday at 10 a.m. at the City Hall South Lawn.

The Inglewood City Council meets every Tuesday, unless otherwise noted, at 2 p.m. in the Council Chambers on the 9th floor, Inglewood City Hall. •
