South Bay Kids Take a Day to Learn from the Way of the Ocean

As part of the TopSail Youth Program at Highland Elementary, 5th grade students visited San Pedro, California and enjoyed a day at sea aboard a tall ship. On this adventure out at sea, students learned problem-solving skills, science, and technology through various activities. Students had the opportunity to assist with raising the sails, climbing the rigging, and taking the helm. Way to go TopSailors. Photo courtesy Inglewood Unified School District.

Biking to the Shoah

Article and photos by
Ben & Glinda Shipley

When Ben was sixteen, his best friend Anthony, a talented Jewish guitarist from London who would one day jam with John Mayall, came to visit in Bruxelles. Ben's best friend in Bruxelles, Johnny, was the proud son of a US Army Colonel, then assigned to NATO and SHAEF. The combination of eccentric Jewish artist and straight-laced, crew-cut Midwesterner couldn't have been more combustible, and they instantly despised each other. Mom told Ben to work it out and take them on a three-day bike ride around Belgium. At least that way, the bickering and snide comments could be kept to a minimum.

And so we set out southeast toward the glorious forests of the Ardennes Mountains. Two days later, when the foothills started to rise, we turned northward onto the flatter Flemish plain. And that was where things went awry. With no idea where we were and the weather steadily deteriorating, we crested a rise in the road and came to a moat and a barb-wire-topped wall that looked like the outer redoubt of a fort. When we circled to the front, the barb-wire gate hung half-open next to a striped guard shack and a sign in German forbidding entry.

Anthony must have sensed what was coming, because he lost his patience and rode away. Ben and Johnny dropped their bikes and edged inside what was clearly a prison of some sort, entirely abandoned to the elements. The bathrooms stank of mildew and ancient urine. The straw still leaked out of the bunk beds packed into the claustrophobic living quarters. The windows were blacked (or actually blued) out from wartime, so we couldn't see much of the barebones kitchen and commissary, but they were clearly not set up for a feast. Outside in the drizzle, a fragment of rope hung from what looked like a gibbet. Johnny found a few shell casings near three thick wooden stocks punched into the earth.

Little did we realize that we'd stumbled upon SS Konzentrationslager Breendonck, the only Nazi concentration camp built in occupied western Europe. The year was 1967, twenty-two years after the end of World War II, and the camp had been abandoned exactly the way it sat on the last day of the war.

Years later, in Jerusalem, we visited Yad Vashem, the Israeli memorial to the Shoah. The central feature of the museum was a huge, concrete map of Europe that showed the location of every major concentration and death camp. And there, on the map, in one of the few western communities that had supported the German invasion, sat Fort Breendonck. Compared to the other camps, our version was

Film Review

Montana Story is a Richly Layered Familial Drama About Making Amends

By Morgan Rojas for Cinemacy

Extending an olive branch of forgiveness proves difficult when the past feels impossible to confront in Scott McGehee and David Siegel's Montana Story. A story of radical acceptance set on the vast Americana plains (with a similar aesthetic to last year's Best Picture winner Nomadland), Montana Story is a richly layered familial drama that will leave audiences thinking about the importance of making amends before it's too late.

Estranged half-siblings Erin (Haley Lu Richardson) and Cal (Owen Teague) are between the beautiful and ethereal nature of the environment and the gritty emotional distress of its lead actors in Teague and Richardson gives the film palpable tension. Both young actors give compelling and complex performances that will tug on your heartstrings throughout the duration of its nearly two-hour runtime.

Set to an original score by singer/songwriter Kevin Morby, Montana Story is, at its core, a film about embracing change and encouraging personal growth. Let go of the resentment that no longer serves you and focus on the beauty of life in the present moment. Because once forced to make overdue reconciliations when they end up face-to-face with one another at their family ranch to be with their dying father, with whom both have complicated relationships. The distressing circumstances of the occasion do not make for an ideal reunion; the presence of a hospice nurse (Gilbert Owuor) is hard to accept and the added stress of impending bankruptcy has Cal on edge, but the unconditional love that binds a family together proves too strong to break as brother and sister work to make amends, better late than never.

The sweeping Montana skyline is the backdrop to on-the-ground resentment and heartache and is wonderfully crafted by directors Scott McGehee and David Siegel, photographed by cinematographer Giles Nuttgens, and further illustrated through editor Isaac Hagy's keen eye for dramatic storytelling. The juxtaposition that moment passes, we can't get it back.

Montana Story is now playing at The Landmark and AMC Sunset 5. •

The High House by Jessie Greengrass

By Mary Martes,
El Segundo Public Library Assistant

There is a surge of new fiction based around climate science and the resulting damage to our planet referred to as "cli-fi" or climate fiction. The High House by Jessie Greengrass is an excellent example of this.

Told in alternating voices of three survivors of the climate apocalypse, the story jumps between the past and the present. We are privy to the inner lives of our protagonists in an intimate and compelling narrative. Sally, Caro and Pauly live together in the High House, trying to survive the decimation of the world as we know it.

Located in a small village in England, the High House is a summer retreat where Caro visits with her father, a professor at a small university, and her stepmother Francesca, a world-renowned climate scientist. The house was inherited by Francesca in a state of benign neglect. When Pauly is born, Caro realizes how truly alone she has felt and is immediately taken with her baby brother. Living with Francesca, Caro is aware of it all – "As I grew up, crisis slid from distant threat to imminent possibility, and we tuned it out like static, we adjusted to each emergent normality and did what we had always done. The unexalted, tedious familiarity of our lives would keep us safe, we thought."

As natural disasters become more frequent and more destructive, Francesca becomes increasingly desperate to wake up the populace and do what she can to protect her family. She leaves Pauly with Caro and travels to conventions, international meetings, news shows and the High House to restore it as a fortress against the coming onslaught. Caro and Pauly become a unit, both in need of each other, feeling abandoned by the ones they depend on. By the time she is 18 and Pauly is nine, Francesca and Father rarely come home.

Through a three-part story, we are privy to the inner thoughts and workings of each survivor, as well as their journeys from the world as we know it to the annihilation of our planet's ecosystem. As Caro describes it, "It was such a feeling, the first day, to have survived. We had been waiting for the end, and it had come – but it was like cresting a peak only to find, beyond it, the whole bulk of the mountain still to climb." Sally, who is the town caretaker's granddaughter, was asked by Francesca to stay at the High House with Caro, Pauly and Grandy, the town caretaker. They would need her knowledge of house-keeping and survival, as well as Grandy's.

I highly recommend this beautifully written book, not only because it is a prescient and thoughtful wake up call, but because the prose is exquisitely spare and intimate. It feels like we are inside the mind of these characters rather than following a narrative arc.

To check out in paper copy or book on CD, stop by the library Monday-Thursday 9am-9pm or Friday/Saturday 10am-5pm. We look forward to helping you find your next great read! •

The last two years have taken a major toll on our community, as we responded to COVID-19. It has also been a time of amazing accomplishments. First and foremost, we are grateful to those who serve on the frontlines of providing care. Centinela Hospital took a moment to celebrate with its VIPs – our employees. ## Your Neighborhood Therapist

Dear Neighborhood Therapist,

I am struggling to lose weight. I have a very supportive partner and family, and I have a personal trainer, and diet books, and medical advice, and anything else you can think of. I feel like I have no willpower, like anyone can do it except me and it feels terrible. I feel like I have tried everything, and nothing seems to be working. I am so sad and frustrated about this and starting to think it's hopeless. How do I find the willpower I need?

– Wanting Willpower, Manhattan Beach

Dear Wanting:

I'm very sorry to hear that this process has been so difficult for you. I'm also not at all surprised. Changing your relationship to food and eating is one of the most difficult things a person can do. Food is not a bad habit that you can quit. Everywhere you go, certain habits are inescapable: large portions, the "finish your food, people are starving" voice, the fact that results are delayed and uncertain, and having an active social life and schedule.

Two very important forces are conspiring against you as well. First, there is a popular idea that willpower comes from within, but I'm not so sure. It's pretty hard muster the willpower to do anything when you don't have either a lot of faith that it's worth it or a lot of fear of the consequences if you don't achieve your goal. When it comes to the body, change can be frustratingly slow, and even then, we can't be sure of the results.

Second, keep in mind that this project you are undertaking is a huge one, potentially requiring you to alter your life radically in many different ways. Who will be there to help you? Who will understand how important this project is to you? Who will support you when you decline invitations that you would otherwise accept?

It's worth having conversations with people close to you about what "being supportive" looks like, and what specific kinds of support you need. Are the people in your life willing to make changes in their own habits in order to help you with your changes? Are they willing to enforce rules, if you want them to? As with any big changes in your life, it's going to be really hard to go it alone. Yes, you are the one who actually puts the food in your mouth. You are the one who has to do the exercise. But there is an entire ecosystem around you that supports the status quo. You are swimming against a very strong tide.

Gather an army of people who are prepared to support you in exactly the way you need them to. They are absolutely essential. Changing your relationship to something so essential is a truly herculean task, and for the vast majority of people, impossible to do alone.

It bears repeating: remember the magnitude of what you are attempting, and recruit allies who can help you. Work on a plan together, and don't be afraid to enlist as much professional help as you can accommodate and afford.

Ways to Get the Most Out of Your Credit Card

(BPT) - Americans of all types love their credit cards. The vast majority own at least one card - including nearly two-thirds of those earning less than $40,000. Despite this card craze, many people don't use their credit cards to their fullest potential.

Credit cards are much more than just a safe and convenient payment method. They also help consumers develop budgeting habits and build their credit, allowing future big-ticket purchases like houses and cars. Here are three tips everyone should know to get the most value out of their credit cards.

Credit card rewards programs are not new to American consumers. In fact, according to the Electronic Payments Coalition (electronicpaymentscoalition.org), 87% of cardholders owned a rewards credit card, including nearly three-fourths of low-income cardholders earning less than $20,000 per year. Moreover, these cardholders greatly prefer their rewards cards, spending on average 43% more compared to non-rewards accounts.

It's no wonder why these types of cards are so popular. There are hundreds of credit card rewards programs to choose from, and each of them provides value for a different kind of lifestyle. For example, if a cardholder likes to travel, they might choose a program that earns airline miles, hotel stays or rental car points. Other cardholders may have large families, so they may find the most value in a rewards program that offers increased cashback at bulk retail or grocery stores like Costco or Sam's Club.

No matter one's lifestyle, there's a credit card and rewards program out there for everyone. These cardholders understand the immense value gained from rewards programs. In fact, 96% of rewards cardholders say that their card-based rewards programs are valuable, and the majority report that their card rewards deliver value on every purchase.

A simple swipe of the credit card is certainly easy and convenient, but sometimes it helps to set your own limits. Thankfully, electronic payments allow you to do precisely that. Many credit card companies provide online trackers and balance alerts to help their customers establish healthy financial practices.

These tools help cardholders manage their spending, ensuring consumers never incur overdraft fees. Utilizing real-time information, online trackers can show cardholders exactly how much they've spent in one period and how close they are to their limit. Adding

Summary of the City of Hawthorne's Proposed Ordinance 2231 to Adopt a Military Equipment Use Policy Pursuant to Assembly Bill 481 and Government Code Section 7070, et seq.

Pursuant to Government Code section 36933(c), the following constitutes a summary of Ordinance No. 2231, which will be considered for adoption by the Hawthorne City Council at its regular meeting on May 24, 2022, at 6:00 p.m. Pursuant to California Government Code section 36933(c)(1), the City Council has previously directed the preparation and publication of a summary of Ordinance No. 2231, which adopts the City's Military Equipment Use Policy as directed by AB 481 and Government Code Section 7071. The purpose of AB 481 and its codification in the Government Code is to increase transparency, accountability, and oversight surrounding the use of equipment that falls within the broad definition of military equipment set forth in Government Code Section 7070. Government Code Sections 7070 through 7075 codify the provisions of Assembly Bill 481, which requires all California law enforcement agencies to identify defined military equipment in the agency's possession, and to obtain approval from the agency's governing body before purchasing equipment that falls within the definition of "military equipment," or accepting surplus military equipment from the federal government. Law enforcement agencies are required to institute a Military Equipment Use Policy and make that policy available to the public, and to provide a forum where the public may comment upon or register complaints about the use of military equipment.

The Hawthorne City Council will be asked to make the following determinations: Whether the military equipment inventoried and presented to the City Council is necessary because there is no reasonable alternative that can achieve the same objective of officer and civilian safety; Whether the Military Equipment Use Policy ("Policy") will safeguard the public's welfare, safety, civil rights, and civil liberties; Whether the equipment is reasonably cost effective compared to available alternatives that can achieve the same objective of officer and civilian safety; Whether prior military equipment use complied with the equipment use policy (which included equipment now defined as military equipment) that was in effect at the time, or if prior uses did not comply with the approved military equipment use policy, corrective action has been taken to remedy nonconforming uses and ensure future compliance. The proposed Military Use Policy and current inventory of equipment defined by Government Code Section 7070 is available to the public on the Hawthorne Police Department's website. A copy of the entirety of the text of Ordinance No. 2231 is available in the office of the City Clerk, 4455 West 126th Street, Hawthorne, California, and is open for public inspection. Pursuant to Government Code section 36933(c), this summary of Ordinance No. 2231 was published at least five (5) days before the ordinance will be considered for adoption on May 24, 2021, at a duly convened regular meeting of the Hawthorne City Council. another layer of protection, balance alerts notify cardholders when they've crossed a certain balance threshold via text, email or push notifications.

Better yet, these tools are often completely customizable - perfectly conforming to each cardholder's unique needs. For example, a cardholder can set tighter restrictions and alerts on their credit accounts if they know they aren't especially frugal. Another cardholder might want to save for a big purchase, so they could set a balance alert to ensure sufficient funds are set aside.

In addition to balance alerts and real-time trackers, most credit card companies will provide a detailed summary and analysis of a cardholder's monthly spending. This detailed insight into cardholders' purchase habits can inform and guide the development of better financial habits.

It's easy to lose track of how many days you stop for coffee in the morning, and who could blame you - those pumpkin spice lattes are delicious! But those purchases add up, and it's all too easy for unsuspecting patrons to overspend. Accessing this data provides essential resources for future budgeting and building better habits.

Without the use of a credit card, analyzing monthly spending habits would require an incredible amount of time - creating an unnecessary headache. Fortunately, credit cards make this process simple and easy. Cardholders can efficiently set budgets and monitor their purchases, gaining deeper insight into their own spending habits. • small potatoes—less than 2,000 casualties—but it gave the lie to the notion that a tiny handful of SS had secretly committed all that mayhem without anyone anywhere noticing.

and maintenance staff stand to work there? How could they stand to live and breathe in the shadow of so vast a human catastrophe? For that matter, how could we stand to stroll

KZ-Lager. It was the first, the prototype, the training ground, and the mother ship, where policies and techniques were invented and hammered out before forwarding onto the done niche of hell.

Today, all over Europe, the sentiments have clearly changed. Older generations have died off, reducing the guilt to second-hand

Idyllic SS barracks at Berchtesgaden.

We have Jewish friends who, to this day, refuse to set foot in Germany or Poland. We have other Jewish friends (and family) who've felt obligated to visit the worst of them, Auschwitz-Birkenau, in the Polish hamlet of Oswiecim, between Katowice and Kraków. Memory is a very complicated situation, and you can't blame anyone for going or not going. We went to Auschwitz and, later, back to Breendonck. Both had been transformed into grim, government-sponsored shrines—although Breendonck had been cleaned up enough for the Belgian authorities to cart in busloads of schoolchildren.

One question that haunted us, especially in Auschwitz, was: How could the guides along pathways once patrolled by grim-faced guards with German shepherds, where millions of mothers and children had walked innocently to their fates? Because you can read all the books and watch all the film in the world, and you'll never come to grips with the sight, the sound, and especially the smell, of such places.

Later on, we asked the same questions in the Munich suburb of Dachau. This was after we'd figured out that the shortest distance between heaven and hell had to be exactly 187 km (117 miles)—or the precise distance between the Dachau main gate and Adolf Hitler's chalet in the idyllic Obersalzberg paradise of Berchtesgaden. Dachau wasn't just any old distant points of the Nazi constellation. In pre-war Munich, a modest conurbation of 839,000, the Nazis and their faithful voters couldn't have missed the place—no matter what anyone would later claim.

After the war, the citizens of Dachau, both the half-innocent and the half-guilty, did their best to shut down the camp and wipe it off the face of the earth. Yes, they'd got the point, genocide was bad, but there was no benefit to dwelling on the past. In Flemish Belgium, the same sentiment met with derision from the mostly French survivors, and like so many controversies in that country, led to an interminable deadlock—and a trio of teenage tourists stumbling into an abanand much more manageable. Yes, there are skinheads and deniers, but those oddballs are taken no more seriously in Europe than they are anywhere else. Citizens, including Germans, Latvians, Poles, and Ukrainians, want to know what happened, even if nowadays, it sometimes seems like bad things were done by one set of ghosts to another. At least until you stumble along the train tracks to the main gate of Auschwitz, and it feels like it all happened yesterday.

We don't recommend that you travel to these places because you'll enjoy yourself. Not to sound too smug or self-righteous about it, but we recommend that you go there because you won't. •

Then and now? Railroad tracks to the main gate at Auschwitz-Birkenau.
