Santa Flies into the South Bay

More than 130 students from three local elementary schools got an early visit from the North Pole's most famous resident during the annual Santa Fly-In event at LAX. Students, ranging from pre-kindergarten to first-grade, were treated to a show that included a performance from Kiddle Karoo, a demonstration by a Los Angeles Airport Police K-9 officer, and interactions with the airport therapy dogs from LAX's Pets Unstressing Passengers (PUPs) program. But the star was Santa, who arrived outside the Flight Path Museum and Learning Center via one of the airport's Aircraft Rescue Firefighting trucks, operated by the LAFD. Santa was escorted to the stage, and greeted the students. He then read Twas the Night Before Christmas, before heading back to the firetruck and riding out for his holiday preparations. Provides Enrichment for Teens

By Ron Sokol

Hawthorne, the "City of Good Neighbors," seeks to uphold its end of the bargain. For example, the Police Department is well known for innovative programs that reach out to the community, including Coffee with Cops. The Ginny Lambert Senior Center is dedicated to showing respect for elders, with a very nice facility and programs (including meals). On this occasion, please let me tell you about the Hawthorne Teen Center, which is another sign that Hawthorne takes its motto very seriously. Drum roll, please...

On December 15th just past, the Hawthorne Teen Center celebrated its fourteenth anniversary. The Center is a collaboration between the fine City of Hawthorne and the South Bay Workforce Investment Board. You know about the City, but do you know about the Board? Its laudable goal is "putting people to work; helping businesses succeed." Thus, one of the significant services provided by the Teen Center is to help young people with internships and job training. This complements, well, the Center's efforts at developing leadership, providing college and career readiness, and resume building for teenagers. The job fields are varied, such as nursing, retail, warehouse, and plumbing.

In addition, the Center has two pool tables, an excellent array of computers, good ping pong tables, books, a television, an outdoor patio, and several dedicated staff members. Assistance with homework and tutoring is available. There are even cooking courses, and there have been field trips to local colleges, including USC, UCLA, Cal State Los Angeles, Cal State Dominguez Hills, and LA Trade Tech.

I am not listing here all that the Teen Center offers. You can learn more online, or call (310) 970-7001 or emailing the Coordinator Sharina Williams at swilliams@sbwib.org.

For local young people to enroll, the ages are 13 to 18. Simply fill out the enrollment package, and have it signed by a parent or guardian; review and approval typically is quite prompt. And, yes, the services are free. Hours presently are Monday through Friday, 3:00 pm to 6:00 pm, during school, then during winter break from 2:00 pm to 6:00 pm. The Center is located at 3901 West El Segundo Boulevard, in Hawthorne (specifically at the Hawthorne Memorial building, and easy to find).

Above I mention Sharina Williams, the Youth Program Coordinator. She has a job before getting to the Teen Center each workday, at which point she oversees not just the Hawthorne Teen Center but also the Teen Center in Inglewood. Sharina's words speak to her genuine devotion:

"One of the main goals of the Teen Center is to provide an opportunity for young people they simply may not get from school or the community. We seek to help them think about a career and consider what may be a good choice. We also provide a haven for a bit of downtime, to meet and talk with other young people, and work with staff. I am a college graduate from Cal Poly Pomona with a degree in history. But I began doing after-school programs several years ago in several South Bay Cities and loved it! Now I have been here since 2019, and hopefully, we are through the Pandemic. I can tell you that the Center strives to be useful to the members, to be a springboard, and thereby enrich the young people and the community itself. It is tireless work."

After I spoke to Sharina, visited the Center, and saw some of the goings-on, I had a tear (or two) in my eyes. Helping young people, guiding them, providing a place for them, well, Hawthorne can rightfully be very proud. The City of Good Neighbors for young and not as young both. •

Big Red: A Novel Starring Rita Hayworth & Orson Welles by Jerome Charyn

By Roz Templin, Library Assistant,
El Segundo Public Library

Classic film stars gallivanting in Old Hollywood – what could be more exciting? Author Jerome Charyn does not let the reader down in this marvelous tale revolving around the relationship between femme fatale Rita Hayworth and “The Boy Wonder” Orson Welles.

Columbia Pictures head honcho Harry Cohn hires a “spy” to be placed near this power couple of the day. Rusty Redburn, a budding gossip columnist who works in the publicity department of the studio is selected to keep tabs on Cohn’s creation: beautiful dancer Margarita Carmen Cansino, transformed into “The Love Goddess” --- Rita Hayworth.

Cohn places Rusty into the position of Rita’s personal secretary. She will gather “information” and report back to the Boss on a weekly basis. Almost immediately, Rusty becomes an advocate for Rita by tutoring her in literature so she can overcome her intimidation of Orson’s intellect. As she is incorporated into their household, Rusty is swept along into their adventures, including Orson’s spectacle, the Mercury Wonder Show.

Using the character of Rusty as narrator, the author achieves quite a feat. Rusty becomes Charyn’s alter ego. Jerome Charyn has taught film history and his extensive knowledge of his subject informs Rusty’s savvy observations as she navigates the seamy side of the movie business while cracking wise in the faces of the rich as well as those on the long slide downward.

There is so much information for those who enjoy history of the Golden Age of Hollywood. Quickly turning the pages, I questioned how much was fiction and how much was reality. I found myself fact-checking much of the asides and backgrounds only to find how much was TRUE! Sure, there’s some manufactured humor, manipulation of events, exaggeration of characters and situations, but much of what you read in Big Red can be verified. There’s a melancholy associated with Rita throughout the novel that is rooted in truth regarding her childhood. The author uses that information to imagine later interactions with her parents that are truly painful to absorb. Rita never seems truly able to harness her own star power and allows her lack of self-confidence to put her on a path to ruin. Rusty tries but fails to protect her friend and is forced to watch Big Red’s sad slide.

Once you open this book, it will be very difficult for you to put it down.

Film Review

Sisterhood is Survival in Women Talking, One of the Year’s Most Powerful Films

By Morgan Rojas for Cinemacy

It’s been a minute since we’ve seen a memorable arthouse output from Orion Pictures, the production company behind box office classics like The Terminator (1984), RoboCop (1987), and The Silence of the Lambs (1991). Their re-introduction to the art-centric, indie crowd hits a high note with writer/director Sarah Polley’s powerful feminist drama, Women Talking. Based on Miriam Toews’ 2018 novel of the same name, Women Talking is an unapologetic statement of radical awakening and action, where feminine needs are the focus and sisterhood is an act of self-preservation.

At first glance, it looks as though we’ve been transported to a remote compound in the early 1900s. Kids running around outside free from screens, conservatively dressed women unloading goods from horse-drawn buggies, and pencils and paper taking the place of computers. But this is not a time-period piece. This is what an isolated religious community looks like in 2010, as close to Amish as one can get without directly saying so. The audience is dropped into the middle of heightened tension as soon as the film begins – clearly, there are disturbing issues that must be dealt with. A group of women from the community’s most prominent families are appointed to sort out the impending dilemma.

The men of the community, who have been mysteriously absent from the compound since the beginning of the film, are accused of sexually violent acts towards the women and children. Outraged and disgusted by their predatory and vile behavior, there is no disagreement from the women the men need to stop. Where it becomes a point of contention is how – or if – the women choose to retaliate.

Within the group are those who want to stay and keep things status quo, those who want to stay and fight, and those who want to leave. The arguments for their varied positions all come back to their interpretation of the Bible, which some take literally while others interpret it more vaguely. Everyone is sensitive to the religious element but that doesn’t stop the women from candidly voicing their opinions, no matter how divisive. Acting as the group’s secretary is the affable school teacher (and sole male) August Epp (Ben Whishaw), who writes down the points and arguments made by the passionate and illiterate women. Shot almost entirely in the hayloft where these conversations take place, the tension builds like a pressure cooker until a decision is finally reached.

Women Talking derives its strength and staying power not just from the eloquently-voiced script, but also from its phenomenal ensemble cast. Rooney Mara, Claire Foy, Jessie Buckley, Frances McDormand, Judith Ivey, Sheila McCarthy, Michelle McLeod, Kate Hallett, Liv McNeil, August Winter, and Ben Whishaw give some of the year’s best performances. Like a delicately woven web, the characters’ lives intertwine amongst heartache, elation, and love. Despite their differing views, they continue their heated conversations for the greater good and immediate future of the women of their community (a gentle reminder that earnest communication can de-escalate many problems).

Resilience is the backbone of Sarah Polley’s script adaptation, beautifully realized on the big screen. The film lacks saturation, giving off cool blues and greys, perhaps in an attempt to show how devoid of color and joy this moment is in all of their lives. The trauma these women are dealing with is both felt and seen. Behind the scenes is another strong female force in composer Hildur Guðnadóttir. Her layered, transcendent score builds throughout the entire film until it culminates in a glorious final sweeping shot that will evoke goosebumps.

Explosive, euphoric, and powerful, Women Talking is a passionate piece of filmmaking from all sides. It broaches difficult subject matter with empathy and compassion and encourages audiences to do the same.

News for the City of Good Neighbors from an Old Guy named Norb Huber

UNITY NOT, A UNIFIER IS BORN!

As I mentioned in my last expose', things have changed in this post-pandemic world that we are living in. Just as we were told to stay six feet away from each other during Covid times, now it seems like we have pulled ourselves away from others in more than just a physical way. Some are reluctant to get back to their pre-pandemic way of life. What can bring us back together? Obviously, politics cannot. We don't watch the same television shows or listen to the same music that used to bring us together. Many Americans are just tired from going through everything in the last two years; they just want to live life "off the grid". It's hard to find common ground on which we all can stand together and unite. I doubt if we will ever see another Ronald Reagan, maybe our last popular, uniting leader whom a majority of Americans got behind. So, we ask what do we have in common? During this last month of the year, we celebrate and do a lot of things. All of this hustle and bustle makes us forget the little baby whose birthday is on December 25th. He is the one unifier that can bring us together. All Christians look to Jesus as the Savior and Redeemer of the world. This common faith can bring us together. Instead of us pulling further away, Jesus sets us free to love others. Jesus reached out to touch, heal, and serve others. He made himself out to be nothing, even when he was everything. When we put our trust in God, we are "united" with all those believers from around the world. We can share sheer joy this Christmas knowing we are in unity with God because of the baby born for us. Peace to you all! Joy to you all! Relax and have a cold one! Relax and love family, friends, neighbors and even total strangers. Let's come together, Jesus brings us together! HE LOVED HIS CITY

Allen Richards, a long time resident of Hawthorne, passed away this past week. He loved his city. He was on several City commissions throughout the years, but he did much more than just serve his appointed positions. I was invited one day several years ago to join him on one of his almost daily city walks. He brought along a notebook. He would mainly walk the most traveled streets of Hawthorne. Whenever he spotted graffiti, or trash, or abandoned furniture he would write a description and note the location of each nuisance. He would end up with a long list after an hour or more of walking. Every two weeks at the City Council meetings he would turn over his list to the head of the Public Works Department in hopes that this would help clean up the City of Good Neighbors. Some people grew tired of Mr. Richards, but Big Al had a big heart. He loved his city and wanted a clean, nice neighborhood in which to live. We all should be inspired by the civic pride that Allen showed us for many years.

A BLESSED CHRISTMAS TO ALL

It really don't matter who in the heck you all are, I'm just rambling to myself. It makes me feel wonderful thinking that some lonely person out there might read this mumbo jumbo and feel warm and fussy inside from digesting a morsel of good will that flows ever so slightly from my computer to yours. I wish for you all nothing but great family times, many cold ones to relax with, gifts that you are happy to receive, and peaceful rest this Christmas. Merry Christmas! •

It's Not Too Late to Maximize Your Fafsa Eligibility, Apply Now

(BPT) - 'Tis the season when families across the country start discussing how they plan to finance their children's college education for the next academic school year.

For parents and college and graduate students (both prospective and current), the idea of completing the Free Application for Federal Student Aid (FAFSA®) might seem daunting.

The FAFSA application must be submitted every year a student hopes to receive any form of financial aid, including federal student loans, grants and Work-Study jobs. Many states, schools and scholarship programs also require FAFSA information for their award decisions. One of the common misconceptions out there is, "I don't qualify because my family earns too much." Don't let this deter you from considering your financing options - apply regardless of how much your family earns, as there is no income cut-off for federal student aid.

The online application is available on the Office of Federal Student Aid's (FSA) website. In the past couple years, the FAFSA has changed to accept the prior-prior year's taxes, so no need to wait until your 2022 taxes are complete; you can use your 2021 taxes to complete the FAFSA for the 2023-2024 school year.

For the upcoming academic year, you can submit the form now. Generally, the federal deadline is June 30 for the current application cycle. However, states and schools may have earlier deadlines for awarding state-specific grants. To find out the deadline for your state, check the official FAFSA website and reach out to your financial aid office for school-specific deadlines.

And if you're curious about how FAFSA applications are doing in your state, be sure to check out this #FormYourFuture FAFSA Tracker, an interactive dashboard that tracks and ranks states' progress toward 100% of their high school seniors completing the FAFSA application.

This fall, the Department of Education retired the myStudent Aid app. Instead, all you have to do is go to the Federal Student

Screening for Colorectal Cancer Can Save Your Life - Making Sense of Your Options

(BPT) - Sponsored by Exact Sciences

Recent news reports have caused confusion about recommendations for colorectal cancer screening. "Media reports inaccurately implied colonoscopies are ineffective at reducing colorectal cancer deaths," said Dr. Paul Limburg, Chief Medical Officer of Exact Sciences, the maker of Cologuard®. "Those headlines glossed over the finding that colorectal cancer mortality risk was estimated to be cut in half for people who completed their screening colonoscopy."

Colorectal cancer is the second leading cause of cancer death in the U.S., but it doesn't have to be. It's also the most preventable. When caught in early stages, colorectal cancer is more treatable in 90% of patients. Despite these encouraging statistics, only seven in 10 adults aged 50 to 75 are up to date with colorectal cancer screening.

Like 70 percent of people diagnosed with colon cancer, Leanne Snow had no family history of the disease. "My doctor told me it was time to get screened for colon cancer," said Snow. "I was grateful to have a noninvasive option that didn't require me to take time off work." She screened with Cologuard, an at-home screening test, and much to her surprise, received a positive result. That positive result led to a colonoscopy and a diagnosis of cancer. The good news was that Snow's cancer was discovered before it spread to her lymph nodes and was effectively treated with surgery.

The U.S. Preventive Services Task Force (USPSTF) has endorsed several methods for screening for colon cancer and it's important to work with your clinician to choose the one that's right for you. The USPSTF is an independent, volunteer task force that makes recommendations about preventive services based on clinical evidence. Recommended USPSTF tests include certain non-invasive stool-based tests (including tests like Cologuard), and direct visualization screenings like colonoscopy.

"If you're 45 or older, it's crucial that you get screened," said Dr. Melinda Cail, a family medicine specialist. "When performed with

Aid site - and the smart technology helps you skip the questions that don't apply to you.

Come next year, when you receive your financial aid letters, you may be looking for an additional source of funding, aka private student loans. These loans, typically from banks, credit unions and online lenders, do not require a FAFSA application and are often used as a supplement to federal aid.

SoFi's private student loans are available for undergraduate and graduate students, as well as parents. In just a few minutes, you can apply online for student loans and be well on your way to financing your education.

It's important to note that private student loans don't offer the same protections as federal student loans, like income-driven repayment plans or deferment options. For this reason, private student loans are generally considered only after other sources of funding, typically from the government, have been considered.

It can sometimes be difficult to determine which loan option will work best for you, so always thoroughly review your options.

USPSTF recommended methods, patients have the best chance at finding a treatable cancer early, or even preventing cancer by detecting pre-cancerous growths."

Cologuard is the first and only FDA-approved, non-invasive stool DNA test used to screen average-risk people for colorectal cancer that is also recommended by USPSTF guidelines. Millions of people have been screened with Cologuard, which detects altered DNA and blood in the stool to find 92% of colorectal cancers in stages I to IV7, including 94% of stages I and II colorectal cancers8. Nationwide, more than 94% of Cologuard patients have no out-of-pocket cost for screening. •

A recent study presented at the American Society of Clinical Oncology meeting showed that blood-based tests result in detecting fewer colorectal cancer cases compared to stool-based tests due to differences in sensitivity and lower detection of pre-cancerous tumors.9 Colonoscopies and stool-based DNA tests remain the standard of care.

"In coming years, more evidence will be developed to appropriately determine the clinical impact that blood-based approaches to screening for colorectal and other cancers might have," said Dr. Limburg. "Until then patients and their doctors need to focus on the many available options that are within the guidelines." •

Purrrfect Companions

Kitten Rescue rescues cats and kittens from a variety of situations. Most live in our volunteers' homes and those volunteers foster them until we can find permanent homes for them. Young or old, tabby or calico, we care for orphaned and abandoned kittens that need to be bottle-fed around the clock, moms with Who's got three thumbs and a beautiful buff coat? This gal! Minnie is an adorable creamsicle polydactyl tabby who was rescued from a feral colony. She was socialized by her feeders outside. She was a bit of a latecomer to the comfy indoor life, so she retains some of her cautious responses to new people and litters, cats that need socialization, and sick or injured animals. When they are finally ready for their forever home, we will help match you with the purr-fect one. When you adopt, you save a life... and in turn enrich your own.

These are just a few of our purr-fect pals who are ready to come home for the holidays!

These two elegant black panther males were captured with their classic tabby siblings and black mama in the parking lot where they lived. Mama did a marvelous job of raising her babies outside. These healthy, beautiful kittens, Anise and Cumin, have transitioned into their foster home easily. They want to be petted, purr when they see you, and love to cuddle. They are so happy to have good food, soft beds, warmth at night, toys to play with, and their siblings and mama to snuggle and play with. Anise and Cumin would be a gorgeous, matched set to adopt together, or perhaps you have a young cat to introduce one of them to.

situations. However, Minnie has been held and snuggled enough that she does love attention from her favorite people once she settles in and gets comfortable in her new home. Minnie is not ideal as a first pet for someone new to cats, since it takes a little understanding of cat behavior to fully appreciate her. She is a wonderful little firecracker for anyone who understands her quirks. If you're interested in befriending a hilarious tiny tiger, Minnie could be your best match.

Cali is a gorgeous kitty who loves to cuddle. She enjoys sitting at the very top of her cat tower, looking over her kingdom like the queen she is. She loves playing with string toys and is very athletic. She is good with other cats but would also be happy as an only cat as long as she has someone who will play with her. While Cali is somewhat independent, she will always sleep right next to you when given the chance. After a long day of playing with her toys and looking at he has run off all that kitten energy, he will happily let you pick him up and will start purring in your arms. His brother, Felix, tends to be more the sweet and shy type. Once Felix takes a little time to get to know you, this snuggle-bug will give you tons of love in return! These brothers would do best in a quiet home where they can get lots of attention, love, and playtime with you. As they build trust and confidence, this duo will blossom into the amazing cats that they are. If you think you are ready for a lifetime of love and cuddles from these two cuties, they are waiting to meet you.

Dane is a loveable, perfect ball of fluff. He is a confident kitten who likes to greet you by rolling over to show you his belly. He loves kitties and loves to follow you around as well. He is happy to play with his foster brothers or he will entertain himself. Dane is a gentle boy and seems to adjust to new situations easily. He is great in the car and will turn for a good snuggle session. Millie gets along with mellow, shy kitties and is very easy going. She likes to play and bounce around but is very polite and well behaved in her play. She would love to be adopted with a friend or companion and would be great with a kitty friend who needs a little confidence boost from a patient friend. Come meet Millie at our partner Tail Town Adoption Lounge in Pasadena. (<http://TailTownCats.com>)

These cats and kittens are available for adoption through Kitten Rescue, one of the largest cat rescue groups in Southern California. All our kitties are spayed/neutered, microchipped, tested for FeLV and FIV, dewormed and current on their vaccinations. For additional information and to see these or our other kittens and cats, please check our website www.kittenrescue.org.

Saving one animal won't change the world, but the world will surely change for that animal. •
