Beantown. Just received a text from Brother Chris, who commented after seeing Tito gag again: "WOW, Angels will be swept in the playoffs!"

And to think, my kid Phillip says that I am negative when it comes to my Angels, Rams, and Kings. Really?

But one of the great things about the very long MLB regular season is that there is usually another game to be played the next day. So you can "turn the page" after a crushing loss, as Angel manager Mike Scioscia says. And turn the page the Angels did the next day, edging the Red Sox, 4-3, with the struggling Fuentes recording the save.

The Yanks are the wife's team, so I must be cautious when verbally running down the Bronx Bombers, or any of their zillion-dollar athletes. But she has said nary a word about the Yanks this season. Either she is not paying close attention cuz she is a busy lady, or she realizes that the regular season doesn't mean squat. What happens in October, that's what matters.

But I would hate to end up playing the Bombers in the playoffs, because we know who always wins in that scenario, right? My team wins, my wife not happy. Understand the scenario, folks? Course if the Angels tangle with the Yanks, it will mean that they had dispatched the Rojo Sox. Win-lose situation?

It looks like the Halos and the Bosox will square off in the first round. All right, I will be positive, and say bring on the Sox and their (sometimes) obnoxious fans. Angels will sweep in tres. Ha, ha.

Watching your Raiders right now on the huge plasma in the mansion, and the corpulent QB, JaMarcus Russell, is playing horribly. Offense seems better off handing the ball to Michael Bush. Russell just threw a pick. Shocker! There are quarterbacks, and then there are "physical specimens" who can't play QB with the big boys, but Russell must have impressed some foolish scout somewhere? But I will opine this: I would almost take Russell over Ram QB Marc "Tinman" Bulger, who has been stealing money from the St. Louis organization for the past 2-plus years. Talk about useless. The Rams alleged offense has tallied a whopping seven points in two games. I assume that the Packers will work them on Sunday.

Just received a text from golfing buddy AA, who mentioned that he was celebrating, belatedly, the 80th birthday of Arnold "The King" Palmer. Arnie's birthday took place a couple of weeks back, but I never got to it because of all the other incredibly important information that I needed to disseminate to the fans.

Did you know that you can buy a beverage concoction in the local supermarket called Arnold Palmer lemonade? And that I have heard that there also might be an Arnold Palmer cocktail available for those who frequent the adult establishments? Learn something everyday, if we pay a bit of attention.

Keep paying attention, folks. I met a couple of supporters this week for the first time. Keep it going, fans. Spread the word about FP. Why the heck not? •
