Chevron

Chevron's Lily Craig delivers $10,000 in unrestricted funding to Tree Musketeers' youth leaders.

Provided by Gail Church

During these challenging economic times when everyone, including large corporations, are reducing or even eliminating charitable contributions, Tree Musketeers counts itself as fortunate to have a few partners like Chevron.

You may recall that the organization was founded 22 years ago by Brownie Girl Scouts, and it operated as a troop project for three years. Chevron was its first corporate donor when it contributed to the cause in 1987, before Tree Musketeers was a tax exempt charity, and has not missed a year since! "The refinery exemplifies the term partner," according to the group's executive director, Gail Church.

Chevron's recent $10,000 cash gift represents less than half of what the company has contributed to Tree Musketeers thus far in 2009. Its inkind donations of printing, supplies and services have allowed Tree Musketeers to make necessary cuts to its budget while continuing programs that are so vital to the community.

Teams of Chevron employees have always been visible at large community events beginning with the first Arbor Day celebration in 1988. Lily Craig is a regular on the Arbor Day task force, and Chevron is generally lead sponsor.

As a corporate citizen, Chevron abides by the common knowledge that we can all help maintain a vibrant community by spending our money locally, especially the economy dips. Its partnership with Tree Musketeers is just one example of the refinery's rich history of investing in El Segundo and its children.
