Dear Carol

Dear Carol,

I have had the same housekeeper clean my home every week for over twenty years. About five years ago her husband started to come with her. Last year her daughter joined the cleaning crew. They don't stay very long; with all of them working they do all of my small house in a little over an hour. They don't do a very good job. They are all short and I am tall. I see dust accumulating on the top of all of my taller furniture because they can only reach the front inch or two. Friends have recommended I ask them to use a step stool but the parents are elderly and the daughter is quite plump. I'm afraid one of them would fall. I want my house to be really clean the way it used to be but I don't want to hurt their feelings by making suggestions or getting a new cleaner. What should I do?

Dusty Dan

Dear Dusty Dan,

The longer we wait to tell people how we feel and what we want the harder it is to speak those words. You are paying the cleaners to clean your home to your standards. I suggest you tell them what you want in a gentle and respectful way with a smile on your face. Do not be surprised if they quit. They may feel they are doing you a favor because of the twenty years association you have shared. They may be looking for a release from the strenuous housework. No one knows what we want unless we tell them.

Dear Carol,

My ex-husband and I were married for almost thirty years and divorced for five. I was very close to his family; I was the daughter his mother never had. My mother-in-law passed away after a brief illness a few weeks ago. She left some money to her grandchildren, my children, and everything else to my ex-husband. I can understand her doing that, I am not a blood relative. I am not upset about not getting any money. I would like a remembrance of her though, just some little thing of hers that will remind me of the years of love we shared. I am not on good terms with my ex-husband, so I don't want to call him. Her household will be broken up soon so I know I have to act now

Marla

Dear Marla,

If your children are on speaking terms with their father they could ask if you could choose something from her things as a treasure. Or another relative or mutual friend could ask for you. If there is something specific you would like to have perhaps one of these people could ask for it and pass it on to you. This might be an opportunity for some healing to take place between you and your ex-husband; so consider asking him directly if you can even if it is in an email.

you are, there is an ultimate purpose for your creation, to be creators here in the networking world of community. So for those of you that donated anything to Blackie, thank you for your support. Your cause helped him to help others that maybe could not afford the things that you gave. In Blackie's passing, I got from his friends and family that he, in his simplest way, was truly happy. He came the way that he was, and that once he really got "life," that was all he really cared about, being happy and getting life in the simplest manner. Even up until the very end, when he came to the realization of the time that he had left, he wanted nothing but to be home so that he could be at his happiest. And that was where Blackie waited for his last pick-up.

Thank you again for all of your contributions. Good-bye my friend. Peace... another place to be in... at all times.

GOLDIE

July 4, 2000 - May 23, 2009

Loved her daily walks, frisbee and ball. We miss you Big Yellow!

IN LOVING MEMORY OF ORBIN GILMER SELF III

October 28, 1953 - June 9, 2004

He was demanding of our time, not generous with his,

Yet he could surprise us with being there at the right place

Just when we needed him most He could be the most patient man, teaching what he loved,

Yet sometimes ruthless with his tongue.

He wrote about life, love, women, the trail.

There were times he wouldn't speak at all.

There were times he seduced us with his words.

He loved his kids, his family, monster movies, music, the mountains, many women and what his family calls "the boys" (you know who you are).

He is missed.

Love, Mom, Dad, Olivia & Orallynn, Matthew & Hobie •
