National Night Out Fosters Fun and Neighborhood Awareness

Hawthorne Dances Up National Night Out as Maxine Waters Makes a Guest Appearance

By Derrick Deane

Hawthorne residents, law enforcement and city leaders danced, ate free food and brought to life the city motto of “Good Neighbors” in the annual National Night Out celebration Tuesday evening in front of City Hall.

Hawthorne was one of a number of South Bay cities to participate in the annual event, but only the City of Good Neighbors could bring out the Laker Girls, long-time Congresswoman Maxine Waters, and a horse which spent most of the evening taking photos with residents and munching on the lawn in front of City Hall.

The three hour event also included music, dancing, a raffle, photo opportunities with distinguished guests, a couple of games of musical chairs and of course, the annual chili cook-off.

Even Mayor Chris Brown got in on the fun doing the Cupid Shuffle dance with some residents. All was kosher until the mayor suggested his fellow councilmembers join him in a game of musical chairs. He called out to Councilman Alex Vargas twice who was in the middle of a conversation with a guest. Vargas nonchalantly shook his head at the mayor.

“We should do something together. Can we at least do musical chairs?” Brown said into the mic and after being ignored, recruited some residents to take the council’s place.

Politics aside, Waters took time to address the attendees and in particular the home owner associations who were represented at the event.

“Home owner associations are so important to our cities,” Waters said. “They are important because they are organized by home owners to make sure they have the best neighborhoods, that they have safe neighborhoods, and that they get to know their neighbors.

Home owner associations are the foundation of a good, strong community.”

National Night Out was founded by Target in 1959 in an attempt by the company to partner with local law enforcement to try and cut down on crime in cities where their stores were located. The event went so well and crime dropped so much that it has become an annual event ever since.

“It’s simply about, pausing all over this country and saying to our neighbors, ‘Let’s get together in solidarity, let’s get together to make sure we’re working together with our local police officers, let’s get together to make sure that we’re getting to know each other,’” Waters said. “Let’s get together to make sure that are communities are safe and that our children are safe and our schools are working.”

Waters also handed out certificates of merit to representatives of the various home owner associations throughout Hawthorne.

“When you have National Night Out, we remind each other that we are neighbors and we ought to act like it,” Waters said. “If you go inside your house and close your door and close your blinds and don’t want to talk to anybody, then you don’t understand what a good neighborhood is all about. You don’t understand what a strong city is all about.”

While the event may seem like a mammoth undertaking for any organizer, Holly Park Home Owners Association President and City Council nominee Katrina Manning actually enjoys it.

“I’ve been doing this for five years and I have a formula that I use for everything,” Manning, who has a background in television production, said on planning the event. “I used to work with a crew of two to three hundred people, so because of that experi-

Manning booked vendors and companies in advance to participate in consecutive months of events to help cut down on the hectic nature of planning and development.

“This is my third or fourth event this year, so I tell them I need them on certain dates and book them and I’m done with it,” Manning said. “It can be really complicated and hectic for some people, but for me, it’s really easy and I enjoy doing this. It is like a hobby.”

Manning has been captaining the event since Hawthorne began participating in 2010. Back then, Manning hosted the event at Holly Park, but as the event has grown, they’ve since moved to City Hall. This year was the second year National Night Out took place at City Hall.

“It keeps getting bigger and bigger every year,” Manning said. “It seems to work because it’s centrally located and it brings out a lot of people. This year I’m grateful because we had a total of seven home owner associations participating,” Manning said.

The event is funded by donations and fundraisers by the HOAs. Target, McDonalds, Costco, and Superior Foods were among the local businesses that donated food like hot dogs, chicken wings, and baked goods for the event.

“Every year, Republic Waste always supports us and the Hawthorne Police Officers Association give us money and I use that to pay for some of the services at the event,” Manning said. “In addition to that, we get people to donate and we give everything out for free.”

As for the chili cook-off, Hawthorne resident Robert Hoffman took home the first place trophy while the runner-up award went to Holly Park representative Charles Andrews. •

The End of the Tour is What Finely-Crafted Filmmaking Looks and Feels Like

By Morgan Rojas for CINEMACY

Often times, when an iconic figure in history, and specifically pop culture, is recreated for the purpose of film, we can't help but have preconceived notions of the subject, who will either live up to our standards, or be a flimsy caricature of said person. While I had heard of author David Foster Wallace before reviewing The End of the Tour, I was not as familiar with him as were the other attendees at the film's screening, where I soon realized that I was sitting amongst a crowd of literary conscious NPR members. The early and scattered premature uncertainty of Jason Segel's performance as the beloved D.F.W. didn't go unheard by me, and yet any question or doubt this room had going into the film was answered by the end. Not only is Segel

News for the 'City of Good Neighbors'

From City Clerk Norb Huber HISTORIC TOUR OF

we become inward thinkers and are in a constant battle to try to always elevate ourselves and make us look better than others. If I lose myself in my passion for helping others, I find myself happy and content with who I am. Now, there are some real "words of wisdom" from Uncle Nobby. Contemplate those thoughts while you sip your next cold one.

FILING PERIOD CLOSES THIS FRIDAY

We will soon find out whose name will be on the Hawthorne city election ballots this coming November. The filing period closes for two city council positions and also the mayoral seat. The campaign season will begin in earnest in September and there will be several candidates forums held throughout the city. We will keep you informed as to when you might get a chance to meet the candidates.

ELECTRONIC SIGN POLICY

At the last city council meeting a policy was passed to regulate the large electronic sign in the middle of Hawthorne Blvd. In the not too distant future you will see private business advertising on the screen. Announcements of city events will be allowed. However, no non-profits or homeowner associations will be permitted to post their messages. The reasoning behind this move is to prevent the city from getting into a legal battle over which group is permitted to post and which groups are not. Some times it's better not to allow anyone to use a publicly owned structure than to let some use it. No bars or topless establishments will be allowed to pay for advertising either.

WATER REGULATIONS IN HAWTHORNE

If your address ends in an odd number, they you are to water your lawn or garden on Wednesdays and Sundays. If your address ends in an even number, you are to water on Tuesdays and Saturdays. You should water before 8 a.m. or after 6 p.m. Do not wash down your drive way. Do not wash your car unless you have a nozzle on the end of your hose. Let's all do our part to conserve our water.

NATIONAL NIGHT OUT

I would like to congratulate the organizers of the Hawthorne National Night Out event held this past Tuesday evening. It was nice to see people from all parts of Hawthorne attend. When many cities are having racial tensions, it's great that we all can come together and celebrate our diversity and our safe city. Thanks to our fine Hawthorne Police Department, we do have a safe city. The food, music and games were all great. We look forward to doing it again next year.

RESULTS OF MY COLD ONE POLL

I asked the question last week as to what is your favorite "cold one".

Beer and Starbuck's Iced Latte Coffee came in tied for first as our favorite "cold one". Thank you to all of you who participated in this very unofficial poll. "Stay thirsty my friends."

Overtime Buzzer Beater Leads Warriors over Hard Work

By Joe Snyder

It was a thrilling overtime game but the Warriors pulled off a buzzer beating 38-35 overtime victory over Hard Work in Hawthorne Parks and Recreation Division IV (age 12-13) play Saturday at the Betty Ainsworth Gymnasium.

The game was tied at 35 after regulation, forcing a two-minute overtime period. As in most of the contest, both defenses did very well to keep the score low. There was no scoring until Tajay Hope heaved a prayer shot that went right into the basket as the Warriors celebrated the win in the very close divisional race.

In the contest that was close throughout, Hope, who scored the Warriors' final seven points, gave the Warriors a 35-32 lead with the basket but it was Hard Work's Daniel Gil that swished a three-pointer with 34 seconds left in regulation that tied the game at 35.

The Warriors had a chance to take the lead as Hope was fouled with eight seconds remaining in regulation. His front end of a one-and-one free throw fell short and the contest went into overtime. In the see-saw battle, Hard Work held an 11-7 lead after the first quarter but the Warriors took a 16-15 edge at halftime. Hard Work led by one at 25-24 after three periods.

The Warriors' balanced scoring attack was led by Hope with seven points, all of them in the final 1:17 of regulation and the overtime period. Michael Harron, Kimani Lavenette and Garry Harris each added six points. Kath Eleby led all scorers with 10 points for Hard Work. Gil and Kevin Eleby chipped in six and five points, in order.

Film Review

mesmerizing, The End of the Tour stands as an early contender for a Best Picture Oscar nomination.

The End of the Tour is based on real-life journalist David Lipsky’s critically acclaimed memoir Although Of Course You End Up Becoming Yourself: A Road Trip with David Foster Wallace, which chronicles the highs and lows of his 1996 five-day journey with his interviewee-author. Jesse Eisenberg plays Lipsky, himself a novelist with a fasciation with Wallace. While working as a reporter for Rolling Stone magazine, Lipsky convinces his boss to let him join Wallace on the last leg of his book tour for the post-modern masterwork Infinite Jest, scoring a days-long exclusive with the writer dubbed genius.

Lipsky, a fast-talking and socially awkward man, first meets the reserved, introspective Wallace at his home. Subtle humor is sprinkled throughout this first “getting to know you” scene, and it’s here where the tone is set for the rest of the film. As the days go by, the bond grows stronger between Lipsky and Wallace, and what was initially a more formal and awkward Q&A evolves into a free flowing and revealing, conversational interview.

Inevitably, as a journalist who also happens to be a fan, Lipsky gets too close to his mesmerizing subject to stay objective. Yet the breaking of this ethical code is what it takes for Wallace’s emotional walls to come down, as he begins to bare his soul to a man he just met. Pretty soon, we, as well as the characters on screen, step back and ask ourselves, who is interviewing who?

It is easy to chart where Wallace’s-depicted personality breaks through and wins us over. The thoughtful dialogue between both characters is sharp and tactful, one of my favorite lines being “reading you is another way of meeting you,” but the minutes-long monologues are where Segel really shines. His honesty and disenchantment with fame is a refreshing perspective on life, and his humility is applaud-worthy. He observes that American life has us programmed to want to achieve everything, but there is nothing wrong with ultimately wanting to stray from the mainstream and be left alone. This is the inspiring path Wallace is choosing to take, but can’t help but let his “Lone Wolf” lifestyle, depression, and loneliness get the best of him.

Segel and Eisenberg’s performances are magnetically matched, the intensity of their relationship growing stronger throughout the film. Much credit is due to screenwriter Donald Margulies, who himself is a Pulitzer-Prize winning writer. He tackles The End of the Tour with stark realism, highbrow humor, and bittersweet insight. This is evident in the film’s final moments, which ends with a single, affecting word.

Director James Ponsoldt’s big break into mainstream cinema came in 2013 with the coming-of-age film The Spectacular Now. Avoiding many of the stereotypical pitfalls most young-adult stories fall victim to, Ponsoldt captured sensitivity and poignancy that left a lasting impression on audiences.

The Miles Teller-Shailene Woodley-starring film paved the way for this next feature, and it is with this same attention to detail and wistfulness that The End of the Tour is greeted.

Meditative and thought provoking, The End of the Tour captures the complexity of one man’s life through a delicate lens. A neatly wrapped package with standout performances, this is an example of what finely-crafted filmmaking looks and, more importantly, feels like. One thing to note–there is a hidden gem if you stay through the end of the film that delights, just like how I’d imagine David reacting to this surprise if the film was to continue on. It will bring a smile to your face and lead you to tip your hat to the creativity and talent of Ponsoldt in insightfully capturing the essence of a brief yet honest, and almost magical, moment in this reclusive genius’s life. The End of the Tour is now playing at the Landmark Theatre & the ArcLight Hollywood. •

Stepping Up the Fight Against Identity Theft and Data Hacking

(BPT) - Fueled by the recent epidemic of data breaches, identity theft has become a major concern for millions of Americans. Major companies like Target, Home Depot, eBay, Anthem Blue Cross/Blue Shield and dozens of others have experienced data breaches affecting millions of consumers over the past two years.

Experts have found a strong correlation between being affected by a data breach and the risk of identity fraud. Fully two-thirds of victims of identity fraud in 2014 also received a data breach notification according to Javelin Strategy & Research. Not surprisingly, in February, identity theft was named the top consumer complaint to the Federal Trade Commission (FTC) for the 15th consecutive year. In March, FTC Commissioner Terrell McSweeney affirmed these concerns citing a recent study that found that Americans are “more concerned about ID theft than violent crime, natural disasters or terrorism.”

While inaction on data security issues by policymakers and businesses has exacerbated the problem, there are effective steps consumers can take right now to protect themselves. “Many actions don’t require a lot of time or energy but they can go a long way in helping to reduce the risk of identity theft,” says John Breyault, vice president of public policy for telecommunications and fraud at the National Consumers League (NCL).

Steps NCL promotes to consumers include:

- Use strong passwords that are different for each website
 - Enable two-factor authentication when possible (this is the code sent via text to your mobile phone which you use to log into a website)
 - Secure your home wireless router and network
 - Don’t click on links in emails or download attachments you aren’t expecting
 - Know what companies store your personal data and limit what you share
- “If you have been notified about a data breach, don’t sit by,” says Breyault. “Change your passwords, watch out for suspicious email and take advantage of credit monitoring or identity theft protection services if they are offered. Better yet, consider putting a credit freeze on your credit reports with the three major bureaus.”

NCL is quick to assert that while there are steps consumers can take individually to safeguard their personal information, more needs to be done at the national level by Washington officials in the fight against hackers who steal information and identities for financial gain.

Advocates are raising the alarm about the increased risk of identity fraud stemming from data breaches. “Businesses are profiting handsomely from the unprecedented amount of consumer data they are now collecting,” said John Breyault, vice president of public policy for telecommunications and fraud at the National Consumers League (NCL). “Unfortunately, when they fail to protect that data, it’s consumers who are often the ones harmed when crooks use their information to commit identity theft.”

FTC Chairwoman Edith Ramirez told Congress last year that, “Never has the need for legislation been greater. With reports of data breaches on the rise, and with a significant number of Americans suffering from identity theft, Congress needs to act.”

Groups like NCL are pushing the federal government to dedicate more resources to combating these kinds of crimes. “Agencies like the Federal Trade Commission should work with businesses that store consumer information to share information and strategies on how to better prevent hackers from breaching their systems,” says Breyault. Specifically, NCL has called on the FTC to convene workshops specifically focused on data security. Such events would bring together stakeholders to begin the process of turning the alarming trend of mega-data breach around. •
