Uber Drivers Pump the Brakes While Company Plots Next Move

By Rob McCarthy

Uber drivers were hopping mad last week and decided they weren't going to take it anymore. A loosely organized group representing the drivers called a one-day strike to demand higher pay and bargaining power. That group, Rideshare Drivers United, was taking a cue from Uber and being disruptive. In the gig economy, disruption is a money-maker for technology startups that almost singlehandedly change consumer behavior.

The revolt didn't severely disrupt Los Angeles International Airport, judging by local news coverage. Television images from LAX showed cars displaying the familiar Uber logos cruising through the airport. However, it wasn't clear if the drivers were supporting the strike or making pickups and drop-offs at the nation's second-busiest airport. Ride-share Drivers United demonstrated at LAX to demand higher pay and better working conditions. The demands included a $28 hourly minimum wage, fares on a sliding scale that increase with gasoline prices, and a new tipping policy.

The L.A.-based group wants job security, too, for the independent operators who work with Uber to connect with people who need a ride. Representatives of the group stressed during Thursday's protest that Uber can remove a driver from using its ride-hailing smartphone app without a formal investigation or hearing. The drivers worry they could lose their livelihood -- up to $240 per day- - without a chance to defend themselves from accusations of wrongdoing by passengers or a violation of the rules of conduct they agreed to abide by.

Uber didn't comment about the strike or whether management is considering the list of demands for higher pay and more bargaining power for its independent workforce. Still, the Ridershare Drivers group vows to keep pressing the company and its rival, Lyft, to recognize the drivers as more than independent contractors. They want to be treated like partners with a stake in Uber and Lyft, both of which are now publicly traded companies. Hedge-fund managers and individual stockholders now are part-owners in the rideshare industry, which analysts say puts both companies under pressure to get more profitable.

One way to do that is to eliminate the need for drivers, and that's something on Uber's radar. Set against the backdrop of driver dissatisfaction and demands for fair treatment, Uber has experimented with a fleet of robotic vehicles that will pick up and drop off passengers. But, will paying customers feel safe enough to climb in?

People in Pennsylvania apparently are. Uber spokeswoman Sarah Abboud revealed that self-driving cars are in operation in only one location in the 50 states: Pittsburgh. Testing is being done in San Francisco and Toronto too, but in cars with someone at the controls. The company doesn't want to eliminate all of its drivers -- just some.

While Uber wouldn't say exactly when drivers might be replaced by software-controlled cars, its customers always will have a choice between going auto or with a guy named Otto. "The technology is still early days and scaling in a reliable, safe manner will take time. I can say that as the technology develops, Uber envisions a future where both self-driven cars as well as those driven by our drivers will be necessary to deploy this technology in a safe manner," Abboud said.

A deadly traffic collision in Tempe, Ariz. involving an Uber self-driving car temporarily halted the program until it restarted last July. Uber Advanced Technologies is the unit assigned to equip cars with the technology and safety devices that will win the trust of state regulators first... then the public that sees rideshare as a better, safer option than owning or driving one's own vehicle.

The company is moving ahead, with financial backing from Toyota and other investors. Eric Meyhofer, who oversees the engineering and software teams at Uber Advanced Technologies Group, says that self-driving technology has great potential for making rideshare more accessible and even safer, but "it's not going to happen overnight."

Bad Blood: Secrets and Lies in a Silicon Valley Startup by John Carreyrou

Reviewed by Jeff Huttinger, Library Assistant, El Segundo Public Library

Unless you've been vacationing under a rock lately, you're probably at least somewhat familiar with the downfall of the biotech company Theranos and its infamous CEO Elizabeth Holmes. Well if not, you're in luck. There are multiple ways to acquaint yourself with this high-profile scandal including the podcast The Dropout, the recent HBO documentary The Inventor: Out for Blood in Silicon Valley and the book I've chosen for this month's review, Bad Blood: Secrets and Lies in a Silicon Valley Startup by author John Carreyrou.

Wall Street Journal reporter Carreyrou chronicles the rise and eventual collapse of the startup Theranos from its inception in 2003 by 19-year-old Stanford dropout Elizabeth Holmes to the shutdown in 2018 and subsequent indictments of Holmes and former company president Ramesh "Sunny" Balwani. It is no wonder this tale has inspired numerous media depictions. Holmes is such a fascinating person! Describing Holmes by her investors and staff as equal parts ambitious genius and eccentric monster, Carreyrou paints a picture of the young CEO as inspiring, vindictive, brilliant and recklessly compulsive. Holmes' hostile managerial style included pitting the different departments against each other in a needless competition that brought out the worst in its employees. Also, there was a level of rampant paranoia throughout Theranos due to the incredibly high turnover and frequent terminations of those who displayed even the slightest hint of disloyalty that kept staff constantly on edge.

Despite the inner office turmoil, Theranos managed to fleece investors and venture capitalists of more than $700 million resulting in a peak valuation of $10 billion. The products they were banking on were considered revolutionary: compact blood-testing devices coined the Edison and its more advanced counterpart, the Minilab. Keep in mind that these devices never successfully worked and their results could not be duplicated. I was shocked at the various ways Holmes and her staff hid these disappointing facts from regulatory agencies.

Add in Holmes' obsession with Apple co-founder Steve Jobs and her fabricated deep voice and you have all the makings of a compelling read. With both a limited Hulu series and feature film starring Jennifer Lawrence on the horizon, this story isn't going away anytime soon. Knock Down The House: Documenting the Rise of Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez

By Kailee Andrews for Cinemacy

Low-budget and born of energy and insistence, Knock Down the House has a great deal in common with the underdog political candidates it profiles. This brisk, 86-minute documentary, available to stream on Netflix, tracks the campaigns of four Democratic women running for the United States Congress drawn further into politics by the shooting of Michael Brown and ensuing protests against police brutality. Amy Vilela of Las Vegas, Nevada was a working mother motivated to advocate for affordable healthcare after her daughter died of a preventable condition. Finally, Paula Jean Swearengin of West Virginia was an activist outraged by the human and environmental in 2018. Of the four, only one wins her race. I'm referring, of course, to Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez -- the now iconic Democratic Socialist who unseated 10-term Democratic incumbent Joe Crowley to become, at 29, the youngest woman to ever serve in the U.S Congress.

These candidates are underdogs not only because they are women or because they are first-time candidates, but because they are not independently wealthy and will not accept funds from corporate PACS. They reject the premise that to win political office, a candidate must possess corporate ties that allow them to mount multi-million dollar campaigns. If enough of them are elected, they intend to enact earth-shattering reforms of corporate control in our political system.

Each candidate was a political outsider, offering a new mold for who can become an elected official. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez of New York City was pulling shifts as a bartender and waitress to support her family. Cori Bush of Ferguson, Missouri was a nurse and pastor abuse of the coal industry. In her community, Swearengin has an encyclopedic knowledge of which families have been affected by the soaring rates of childhood and adult cancers in the mining-heavy mountain towns.

You might think it's unfortunate for the documentary's narrative that only one of its profiled candidates made it to Congress. However, director Rachel Lears' subjects make the cogent case that losses play as much a role in the Democratic process as victories, if not more. For every woman who makes it through to Congress, hundreds try. And each who tries her hand builds the infrastructure, energy and sense of normalization that allows women to govern in a system still defined by unrepresentative, imbalanced male majorities.

In one of the film's most energizing moments, Cortez encapsulates this persistence in a single sentence, as she offers her young niece some advice. Cortez explains, "For every 10 rejections, you get one acceptance. And that's how you win everything." •

Park Gets a Facelift as Inglewood Puts Its City Dollars to Work

By Haleemon Anderson

The revitalization of Ash Park was the talk during Tuesday’s meeting, as the Inglewood City Council took pride in reopening the park with a grand celebration on the weekend. The park sits in Councilmember Eloy Morales’ District 3. And in fact, it was Morales who kept the rundown park on the local radar, according to Mayor James T. Butts. “Eloy has been talking to me about this park for a long time,” he said.

The park holds special significance for Morales, who grew up playing there. He says he remembers when fences went up to discourage gang activity. Morales said a neighborhood committee recruited volunteers to spearhead the renovations. He said District 3 Council Assistant Jaime Gutierrez took the project personally. “We both grew up at that park,” said Morales.

Formally known as Ashwood Park, the re-modeled area is bordered by the 405 freeway to the west. It sits on Ash Street, between Lime and Nectarine, just two blocks south of Manchester Boulevard. The park now features new tennis and basketball courts, exercise machines, a walking path and a splash pad. Morales thanked everyone involved in the renovation. “Without the Council, it wouldn’t have happened,” he said.

Butts thought the change was remarkable, noting the park in the ‘80s had become a haven for gang activity. “To come to a point in our evolution where we can spend $1.6 million renovating a park, to celebrate that change is amazing,” he said. “[Eloy] is fortunate to have his parents there to see all he is accomplishing in the neighborhood he grew up in. And it was nice to see people from the community there to celebrate government working for them and their children.”

A public hearing opened on granting tow referral permits. Lieutenant Heard provided a staff report, citing that both B & H Inglewood Tow and Bryant’s Inglewood Service had passed background checks.

Public comment included an advisory that B & H Towing be held to the referral process, as there have been problems with the company not following procedures in the lien process and further litigation when a

Wiseburn Board Tables Soccer Field Financing, Gets Dana Update

By Duane Plank

As the 2018/19 school-year calendar winds down, the Wiseburn School Board met last Thursday night and viewed the annual presentation from Dana Middle School. It also again tabled a proposed financing plan for the Wiseburn High School soccer field -- a project that has lagged because of unforeseen construction site circumstances, electrical issues, cost overruns, soil degradation and underlying underground pipe issues.

Wiseburn Unified School District Superintendent Dr. Blake Silvers noted prior to the meeting, “You get to the point where you are out of money and then you need to build the soccer field.” He pointed out that it was a “perfect-storm” of issues that led to the delay of the field construction. Silvers said the approximate timeline for the field being ready for play would be to have soccer players on the pitch, hopefully for the 2019/2020 prep soccer season. The School Board could potentially give its blessing to the field financing plan at the May 30 meeting.

The Dana Middle School presentation focused on revamping a campus advisory program that had been labeled TLC (Targeted Learning of Content) but has since been rebranded as POD. Dana Assistant Principal Lisa Wilberg and her team of teachers Jessica Aguilar, Barry Williams and Aimee Glotz explained to the Board the evolution of the POD program and how it is helping reach middle school students and enrich their campus learning experiences.

Wilburg emailed that that program was dubbed POD because the Dana students are “dolphins” and that “dolphins swim in pods in the wild, and we wanted this class to be like a student’s family at school -- a place of positive support.” Students meet with staff for 45 minutes each school day.

The Dana administrators felt that the TLC program had hit a stalemate, with rebranding and new practices a necessity because students were drifting from established Dana “signature practices.” There was diminished “school connectedness” and the “overcoming of disparate activities” that left all involved feeling unsuccessful and in need of fresh ideas.

The POD program is in place to implement the signature practices, including personalizing the middle school experience; and developing and strengthening student ownership of behavior as well as their ownership of learning.

The presenters spoke of the success in the program in building connectedness; and POD competitions, including the success of Literacy Week and spirited math competitions as well as POD sessions stressing bullying prevention. The 15-minute presentation ended with slides portraying teacher-participant satisfaction with the nascent program, including a seventh grade teacher who opined, “I like PODS 20/20 & Flex structure... We use flex-time for bonding as well, but if students need time to meet their goals, we have the student ownership of the learning option too.”

Uber Drivers

Job security for Uber drivers is safe for now. “Building best-in-class self-driving technology will take time, and safety is our priority every step of the way,” Meyhofer said in a post on the Uber website.

Last week’s driver strike was staged to get the company’s attention, with a hope of Uber executives listening to driver demands for a fixed hourly rate and having a union-like presence in corporate discussions about operations, fare pricing and compensation. Uber says its driverless car technology is dependent on public feedback and acceptance to propel the project forward. Uber’s spokeswoman called public perception a “critical component.”

The company talks regularly with community and school groups in Pittsburgh, San Francisco and Toronto so that the technology it hopes to deploy someday is better understood and seen as less of a threat.

The company won’t say when testing might start in California, where the Department of Motor Vehicles must grant permission for companies to operate self-driving cars and SUVs on public streets. Google auto-piloted cars are regular sights in the Bay Area. A ride in one of these is closer than you think.

The Las Vegas Strip is serviced by a small fleet of software-controlled BMWs that make pickups and drop-offs. The ride-share app for Aptiv will send an autonomous car, occupied by a driver and an engineer. Even though the cars can navigate through traffic on their own, they don’t yet. Aptiv has the technology, but is pumping the brakes for now. “You can’t predict every situation. So we always err on the side of safety,” said Aptiv’s managing director Abe Ghabra. There is a great deal riding on this research.

Uber and its independent drivers aren’t the only ones with a stake in this. Toyota Motor Corp. has a $700 million stake in the Uber project. Toyota and Uber have agreed to deploy auto-piloted Sienna vans in the rideshare company’s fleet in less than three years. •

Wiseburn

School Board President JoAnne Kaneda lauded the POD program, commenting on the power of positive feedback for students. “You never know what someone is going to remember,” she said.

The Board later in the meeting tabled the proposed plan to fund the construction of the soccer field, which would have entailed the District signing a lease agreement with PNC Bank. Under that arrangement, Wiseburn would spend around $172,000 yearly, for seven years, to finance the field construction. According to Silvers, the proposed creative financing plan could save the District about $200,000, as opposed to selecting other options.

Juan Cabrillo Elementary Principal Lisa Baggio quickly spoke to the Board regarding a conference her administrative team recently attended that she felt was extremely valuable for the District. The conference was geared towards ramping up the development of tiered intervention programs that would support all student needs. Baggio said that while Wiseburn was already implementing a somewhat similar program, attendees at the conference were inspired by the presentation and left with the understanding that the education process needs to be constantly redesigned to meet all students’ needs.

In member reports, Dr. Neil Goldman spoke of the “magic in the classroom and the difference-makers that we are all supporting,” noting teacher appreciation week.

Board members Nelson Martinez and Roger Banuelos gave kudos to all District teachers, and Kaneda thanked the teachers. She noted that as 2018/19 winds down, every year is a new opportunity. She mentioned the accomplishments in Wiseburn, spotlighting the “big things and a ton of little things” that sometimes go unnoticed.

In his comments, Silvers spoke about the “little things” that had influenced him to become a teacher and had made a major impact on his educational life. He cited the “positive, overt and subtle messages that are going out to our kids” to help them feel “safe and secure.” He also touted recent District musical performances. “The kids and teachers are phenomenal,” he said. He also mentioned the high attendance at a recent elementary family math night and the continued ramp-up of school site safety. “What we are doing here is good,” Silvers said.

After the members and administrators gave their reports, the Board got down to the nuts and bolts, approving various change orders as the construction work continues at Wiseburn High School.

One of the items on the agenda was the retirement of 25-year employee Anita Collins, who will soon be leaving her administrative duties at Anza Elementary School. Anza Principal Alberto Paredes emailed, “Anita is an invaluable member of Anza. No matter how busy she is, she will always stop what she is doing to help someone in need. We are all going to miss her.” Silvers called Collins “an absolute pillar” of the school and District. He called her retirement a “tremendous loss to the organization” that will leave “a gaping hole” in the Anza resident’s car was towed. The action to grant towing rights in the city to both companies was passed unanimously, with Councilmember Dotson absent. Morales said the referral process goes through the police department and is monitored to protect against possible situations as mentioned above.

Several residents spoke on keeping the issue of affordable housing and rent control on the Council’s agenda. Julia Wallace commented on the 8 percent cap instituted by the Council last month, noting it is not sustainable. Tiffany Wallace compared the Inglewood measure to Los Angeles’ affordability, pointing out that in Los Angeles rent increases are capped at 3 percent. Wallace criticized the Council, calling its rent increase moratorium “a piecemeal action.” She added, “A couple of people get help, but not everyone gets help.”

A woman describing herself as a single mother, born and raised in Inglewood, said she is disheartened to hear the insensitivity expressed by many toward the housing crisis in the city. “I can’t afford a thousand-dollar increase,” she said.

Upcoming on the Wiseburn calendar are open house dates at Cabrillo and Burnett, with the next School Board meeting calendared for Thursday evening, May 30. •

Resident Joseph Texeria gave an impassioned description of the accident the Mayor was involved in last week, seemingly blaming the accident on alleged negligence.

Ken Williams, a business owner, noted his beauty school at 242 N Market Street is the only school currently here in Inglewood. The family business represents 90 years of history, he said.

During comments, Councilmember Alex Padilla said, “We take the rent control moratorium very seriously, as we’ve commented in the past. Your concerns aren’t falling on deaf ears.” Padilla also thanked Team Prime Time and the Clippers for sponsoring a basketball tournament at Crozier Middle School between Oak Street and Warren Lane.

Additionally, Padilla asked the public to be cautious of the construction on La Brea from Florence to 64th Street. “Be patient, maybe take other streets. And let’s make sure we keep our construction workers safe,” he said.

The Inglewood City Council meets every Tuesday, unless otherwise noted, at 2 p.m. in the Council Chambers on the 9th floor, Inglewood City Hall. •

The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority. your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney. IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law. YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk. Attorney for Petitioner GAYLE J. CARSON - SBN 283920 BEZAIRE, LEDWITZ & ASSOCIATES 21516 HAWTHORNE BLVD. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee's sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call 916-939-0772 or visit this Internet Web site www.nationwideposting.com, using the file number assigned to this case 76661. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not be immediately reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. Dated: 04/25/2019 RESS Financial Corporation, a California corporation, as Trustee By: BRUCE R.
