Chevron Donates Math, Reading Materials to Kornblum K Class

Chevron representatives visited Ms. Mathis’ kindergarten classroom at Kornblum Elementary School in Hawthorne earlier this week to see their newly funded math and reading materials in action. Classroom project funding resulted from Ms. Mathis submitting her project through Chevron’s Fuel Your School Program—an annual public school support initiative conducted in partnership with DonorsChoose.org to provide necessary classroom project materials for enhanced learning. Submissions opened on September 1 and teachers had until Friday, November 3 to submit their projects. Photo provided by Lily Craig, Chevron External Affairs Manager

Council Unanimously Prohibits Non-Medical Marijuana Businesses

By Derrick Deane

Non-medical marijuana businesses will have to look elsewhere to set up shop after the Hawthorne City Council voted unanimously in favor of Ordinance 2148 during a recent meeting. In addition to prohibiting non-medical marijuana businesses from opening in the city, Ordinance 2148 will also regulate indoor and outdoor cultivation of non-medical marijuana on private residences within Hawthorne.

Despite the overall approval of Proposition 64, the adult use of marijuana act by voters during last year’s election, the regulation of the proposition was left up to individual cities.

The proposition allows people 21 years and older to smoke or ingest marijuana products, to possess 28.5 grams of unconcentrated and eight grams of concentrated non-medical marijuana, and cultivate up to six plants per residence for personal use.

“The act also said that as a city, we can either ban or regulate non-medical marijuana businesses,” Hawthorne Planning Director Brian James said during a presentation. “We can also ban or regulate outdoor cultivation and deliveries, but we cannot ban someone driving through our jurisdiction to go to another.” The City also cannot ban the indoor cultivation of six plants, but can impose “reasonable regulations.”

The ordinance impacts two sectors--commercial and residential. In terms of commercial restrictions, the ordinance now prohibits non-medical marijuana businesses from opening in the city as well as indoor/outdoor cultivation of commercial marijuana and delivery of non-medical marijuana.

“This is going to be a brand-new market in the state and we don’t know how it will perform,” James said. “We also don’t know what regulations would be best to address it.

Another issue is that the state and county, who we would have partnered with, don’t have their regulations set yet.”

Hawthorne could have received some revenue from the sale of non-medical marijuana both from shared state revenues along with a number of local taxes including cultivation, manufacturing, excise and business license taxes. Such local taxes would have gone to a public vote for approval.

California will enact a 15 percent excise tax on the sale of non-medical marijuana. The approval of Ordinance 2148 removes any of this revenue from consideration. “The cities that do not allow non-medical marijuana will not have access to state grants for enforcement purposes,” James said. “However the state’s Track and Trace program has not been set up yet.”

Track and Trace is a program that has been set up by the state to monitor the marijuana industry from seed to sale and consumption to ensure that cities are getting their fair share of the excise tax revenue. “Without that being set up yet, how do we know what we’re going to get,” James said.

Another issue with revenue is that marijuana is still illegal in the eyes of the federal government, so any proceeds from non-medical marijuana businesses cannot be deposited into federally insured banks. “It’s basically an all-cash industry and there is an issue with theft that we would need to be careful of,” James said.

For residential purposes, the ordinance prohibits outdoor cultivation and imposes regulations for indoor cultivation of plants. Residents must cultivate plants within a secure and fully enclosed structure that is not visible to the public. Lighting for cultivation is restricted to 1,200 watts and no gas products may be used. Finally, structures must be properly ventilated and filtered to prevent odors from emanating into the public.

The ordinance also defines what is deemed a public nuisance regarding non-medical marijuana cultivation. Repeated responses by law enforcement personnel, odors, noise and excessive crowds or traffic at a specific residence can all be deemed a public nuisance.

Though in favor of the ordinance, Councilmember Olivia Valentine stated she had numerous concerns, but thought the City Council should still monitor how other cities allowing non-medical marijuana businesses move forward. “We have to monitor this on a regular basis because I’m afraid we’re going to have real difficulty in enforcing this as we go along,” she said.

Councilmember Angie Reyes English noted that the ordinance could potentially be a lost opportunity for Hawthorne. “It may be a lost opportunity for the city of Hawthorne--but I also understand that although the state passed a proposition and it was favorably approved by many residents, it still lacked with support in some communities,” she said. “So that’s where we’re at.”

Despite voting in favor for the ordinance, English did express some concern in terms of non-ambulatory use of marijuana. Non-ambulatory use requires a note from a physician or doctor in order to legally possess marijuana.

English said that ultimately the decision comes down to individual cities to assess guidelines and regulations for non-medical marijuana. “That was the idea--that municipalities would ultimately be the ones to say yes or no on whether it would be allowed in their communities,” she said. “I hope that we can work with other cities so that we can learn more and I hope that taps in to the City of Los Angeles to hear what they’re doing.” •

5 Essential Soft Skills for a Job Interview

(BPT) - Picture this: After months of networking and polishing your resume, you managed to make the necessary connections, get in front of the right people and land an interview.

You deserve to be here. After all, you have an impressive background, great experience, fantastic references and are confident you can exceed the requirements of the job. The interview is really just a formality.

For many, the hardest part of the job hunt is simply getting an interview. However, many top candidates get passed over and are surprised when they are not offered a job. The reason for this is they often spend a lot of time practicing how to answer questions and explaining their qualifications, but forget about the soft skills.

A successful interview is about making the right impression, and these five soft skills are essential to making the impression that leads to a job offer.

1. A memorable appearance. We all know you need to dress your best before going into an interview, but you should go the extra mile to ensure the person you meet with remembers you. In addition to looking clean, tidy and professional, dress in a way that makes you feel confident and will make others notice.

2. Be ready to floss on the go. If someone notices something in your teeth, a piece of spinach or fleck of cereal, they won't be able to see anything else. Before any interview, be sure to have a pack of Plackers Flossers with you. Made with strong floss that can quickly remove any gunk stuck in your teeth, these convenient one-handed flossers also double as a toothpick. Don't leave home without them!

3. Exude confidence. Beyond just making you look good, the big reason behind dressing well and double checking that your teeth are clean and free of gunk is because this will give you confidence. Hiring managers can tell the difference between someone who is confident and someone who is not. Needless to say, they're more impressed by confidence! So even if you're nervous, dress up, keep clean, give a firm handshake and-if you have to fake it until you make it!

4. Keep it positive. How you answer questions is often just as important as the answers you give. Always frame what you say in a positive note. In describing difficult managers or poor work conditions at other companies, frame it as a challenge you were happy to take on, an opportunity to learn and grow. Most importantly, remember to smile!

5. Eat well. You might be nervous and lose your appetite, but be sure you eat well the night before and the morning of the interview. Whole grains and foods loaded with fatty acids, such as salmon, eggs and kale, can help you feel great and relaxed for the interview. Just remember to have a few Plackers Flossers on hand so that energizing meal doesn't become an unsightly mess in your mouth! •

Health and Wellness Benefits of Volunteering

(BPT) - In the business world, we hear a lot about the bottom line and quarterly reports. For those in the nonprofit sector, it's often a matter of reaching fundraising goals and achieving their mission statement. No matter what kind of organization you work for, there are big-picture goals, but of course there are more.

Increasingly, companies are realizing that part of this big picture is giving their employees the opportunity to volunteer for worthy causes, even paying them to do so. These efforts can lead to some serious collective gains. For example, according to The Health of America - Community Investment Report, employees from the 36 independent Blue Cross and Blue Shield (BCBS) companies volunteered more than 400,000 hours and donated over $11 million in 2016 alone.

Individual efforts really do add up. Whatever program your employer has in place, here are some of the enormous personal benefits that come with volunteering.

Productivity. Many would like to volunteer but just don't have the time. Who doesn't want to take a little time off and get away from their busy lifestyle and just relax? In a way, volunteering can help you do just that. According to a study in the Harvard Business Review, helping or giving your time to others can make you feel like you have more time, and in turn, make you a more productive worker.

Health. Many studies have found that people who regularly volunteer tend to lead healthier lives and have a reduced risk of heart disease. The jury is still out as to why exactly this is, but giving back to others seems to reduce stress, build confidence and increase a person's sense of satisfaction. These psychological factors play an enormous role in our physical health.

While they help create connections and build community, volunteers also get a huge amount of personal benefits from their work. Better health, a sense of satisfaction and joy that comes with helping others are only a few of the reasons why more people are deciding to give their time to others.

Community. In our digital age when everyone is engrossed in their smartphones and seem to be locked in their own world, connecting with others - whether it's those in need or other volunteers - is more important than ever. This is what happened when BCBS companies spearheaded efforts to improve health care access for the uninsured and under-insured. Volunteers helped at mobile clinics and food banks and with educational programs, making invaluable contributions and connections in their communities.

Family. When their employer gives them the opportunity to take a day or two off to volunteer, many people bring their family along. The reason is simple: coming together to do something for others is an incredible bonding experience and can really strengthen relationships. •

News for the City of Good Neighbors from an Old Guy named Norb Huber

VOTERS SAY YES ON HH

A landslide took place in Hawthorne this past Tuesday. Where in the heck is there a hill in Hawthorne for it to slide, you might ask? The landslide took place at the polling booths and through the absentee ballots that were cast in favor of Measure HH. Close to 70% of the voters gave Hawthorne the YES that was needed to keep the City headed in the right direction. Less than a penny for every dollar spent in sales taxes is a small price to pay to keep our Police, Fire and our City services operating at full force. The morale of our city employees has been lifted. The City Council can now move ahead with plans to make Hawthorne a viable city to compete for jobs and businesses to come to our fine city. The Measure will give everyone something to be happy about. Unlike the 12 cent gas tax that recently went into effect, you and me will probably not even notice what HH tacks onto our purchases. Just know that the City is better for it and let's move on to making a better City of Good Neighbors. Thank you Hawthorne for making the right choice.

If you can't make the party, be sure to thank any vets that you know.

CHRISTMAS IS COMING

KRTH will begin playing Christmas music this Friday. Costco has had Christmas decorations for sale for the past month. The big one is coming. We haven't had the big Turkey Day yet, but the holiday of all holiday's is here. The Hawthorne Parks and Community Services Department of the City is sponsoring a "Winter Wonderland Spectacular" for kids of all ages on Thursday, December 21st from 6 to 9 p.m. at Memorial Park. There will be a snow slide, winter play area, carnival games and prizes. Santa will be there for photos with the kiddos. Hot cocoa, food and much more are all on the schedule. The cost is $5 for ages 1-11 years and $7 for 12 years and older. So mark your calendars. There will be a 21 day count down for Santa to arrive, so be on the lookout for Santa sightings throughout Hawthorne.

WISEBURN HIGH SCHOOL

Congratulations to our friends at the Wiseburn School District upon the opening of a dream building. The Wiseburn High School has been a goal for decades. The District has wanted to have a facility to offer nothing but the highest educational program around the area to their students graduating from their middle school. With the development of the Da Vince' Charter Schools, the District moved into becoming one of the most desirable for secondary students to attend in the past decade. Families from outside of the Wiseburn District has been placed in a lottery to see who would be the lucky ones to attend the free, public high schools that offer private school education. Graduates from Da Vince' Science have been accepted by some of the most competitive universities. They are producing many engineers who are coming back to area companies to work and live right here in the South Bay. The new building will also house the District offices and the Charter offices. Congrats to all who have made this great school a reality.

SAFE AT CHURCH?

Mass shootings and terrorist attacks are happening now anywhere, at any time and for any reason. You would think that you would be safe inside your house of worship. You would think that God would protect those people who have come to worship Him. That is not always the case. We live in a world of sin. Bad things happen to good people. Is God still in control? How could God allow death to come to innocent children and their family members? We search for answers. In our deepest times of distress and worry, we find the peace of God to be there. God IS in control. He sent his Son to die for the sins of the entire world. God loves us. We cannot understand the whys of earthly tragedies, but we lean on God's promises in His Word to comfort us. Jesus is our Good Shepherd. He leads to us to still waters. He restores our souls. Even though we walk through the valley of the shadow of death we will fear not, his rod and staff they comfort us. No cold one can give me that kind of peace. No gun can protect me like that. We all live in this sinful world, we all can put our trust in God and we all can have that peace. Now, since we have all the small things figured out and we are at peace with the world, God, and all of mankind, now we can enjoy that cold one. Peace and Cheers to all! •

Brazile's DNC Allegations Indicate More Than Unethical Agreements

By Cristian Vasquez

Excerpts released from former Democratic National Committee interim chair Donna Brazile claim that an unethical agreement between the DNC and Hillary Clinton's 2016 presidential campaign was reached in an attempt to keep the DNC alive financially. While it is no surprise to hear that Clinton is being accused of something unethical, it is alarming that the DNC would resort to such actions, for any reason, and to the degree that Brazile claims. These actions are more than just a shakeup within the Democratic Party's establishment--and lifelong supporters of the party should be angered and need to either clean house or abandon ship.

In all fairness, it was announced in 2015 that a joint fundraising effort between the DNC and Clinton's campaign was in place. Furthermore, by 2016 the two had signed an agreement to fundraise together under the guise that the agreement was no different from the ones President Obama's campaign used in 2008 and 2012. Yet, Brazile's claims that Clinton's campaign pumped money into the DNC for control of its finances one year prior to Clinton becoming the official nominee shows a level of corruption that justifies the President's "Crooked Hillary" chant. The writing is on the wall is clear: Clinton dangled the carrot in front of the DNC for her power pursuit. The DNC took the carrot and at the end of the day, they both got what they deserved: a failed campaign. Unfortunately, the American people will pay for their mistake for the next four years, if not eight.

Based on Brazile's claims, Clinton and her campaign had the blessing of the DNC and at least a one-year advantage over every Democratic Party candidate and still failed miserably. Will people now accept how horrible of a candidate she was? Her supporters probably won't, and many will likely resort to Russian interference or dirty campaigning to justify the loss. The reality is that Clinton and the DNC personify what the Democratic establishment has evolved into: a movement without structure, without leaders and without substance. We can point to Democrats who are considered the future of the party (Newsom, Harris, Castro or Kennedy III), but what kind of future can registered Democrats expect when the DNC leases its powers to one candidate to pay off massive debts? One of two things will happen: the young Democrats climbing the ranks will either cooperate with the DNC playbook, hence becoming part of the problem...or, they will simply never shake off the label of potential leaders and get stonewalled by their party.

Politics is a dirty game and learning about these accusations comes as no surprise, but Democrats need to be more than outraged--if not by the lack of ethics behind this agreement, then at least by the lack of coherent leadership from the party. At the end of the day, it was Clinton and the DNC that lost an election to a candidate who had never held public office, despite all the advantages granted to Clinton via an unethical agreement. •

House of Cards Continues to Crumble in Libcentric Hollyweird

By Duane Plank

Shocked to see a push-back last week against the latest Plank diatribe in the letters section. Egads!

Did you fill up your gas tank in the last week? If so, say thank you to the extra money that you forked over to the soon-to-be termed out Cali Governor Jerry Brown, whom I pretty much like, by the way. The guise is that they will take the billions that they are lifting from our wallets and fix the crappy roads and remedy other transportation issues that have plagued the great state of California for more than a few years. Sure.

Not that the extorted money will be used to help fund the Brown-backed boondoggle of a bullet train, right? A bullet train that is headed god knows where and will cost tens of billions. Or maybe the Dems and the next Governor, who undoubtedly will be a Dem, will funnel the extra gas tax and car registration fees that were rammed through by the Dems who run the sanctuary state of California into trying to lessen the incredible pension funding problem that has plagued our state as politicians have continued to kowtow to unions in their effort to win election after election.

And kowtowing to the unions has worked, if working is jamming the political positions in this state with left-leaning pols. Who were/are trying to enforce some kind of insanity that was termed the "Road Diet." Choking off the commute in our neighborhoods as we steam to and fro from work every day.

Hoping that we will bike to work, walk to work, or take the very inconvenient public transportation options to work, or to our other destinations of commerce or recreation.

That is a great thought--biking to work. Save the environment, save this, save that. Climate change and all. Do you think the corpulent Al Gore, alleged mastermind of the global warming diatribe, or the sweaty, somewhat chubby actor Leo De Caprio--another alleged protect the environment wacko--have ever biked to work? Or taken public transportation?

For me, that would mean biking to the See's Candies distribution center on Alameda Street in Carson. Yeah, that would be a great idea. At 5:30 in the morning, I will jump on my crummy bike, ride it 20 miles to Carson and feel good because I have saved the planet. I am sure that my co-workers would love to sit next to a guy who just sweated his way through a 20-mile bike ride.

No showers at See's Candies, at least that I am privy to, so I can arrive drenched in sweat...if I don't get killed on the way, riding my tricycle in the dark. And then--after putting in an incredibly tough day of working with our fundraising and business partners, cajoling them and utilizing my incredible sales talents--hop back on my crummy bike and navigate my way back to the safety and sanctity of El Segundo.

Yeah, that seems like a great option. I am starting to warm up to the option of being taxed even more and saving this planet. •

Thor: Ragnarok Brings Fresh Perspective to Marvel Universe

By H. Nelson Tracey
for www.cinemacy.com

Covering the Marvel Cinematic Universe from a critical perspective is always interesting: the behemoth franchise never missteps or whiffs, but often fails to leave us with an individual film to be remembered. The most inarguably flat film of the entire franchise may be Thor: The Dark World. While we all have our favorites (or least favorites), this cold, heartless sequel is never brought up in conversation since its release. With the first outing of Thor, a compelling character arc was put in place: our hero went from being a brash, arrogant and clueless character to a more grounded hero by the end of the film. It's a great journey, but it only lasts for one film--so by the second Thor movie, there was no place for him to go forward and the writers didn't even bother to attempt it. This, more than any other reason, is what made the second film so stale.

So where to go from there? If there is ever proof that anything can be great under the guidance of the right person, it is Thor: Ragnarok. Entrusted in the hands of indie favorite Taika Waititi--whose last two films, Hunt for the Wilderpeople and What We Do in the Shadows, are some of the best comedies of the decade--it was anyone's guess what a massive scale blockbuster would look like under his influence. To our delight, the film more closely resembles the work of Waititi than a conventional Marvel film, and we are all able to benefit from it.

From the very get-go when we see Thor in action on some brooding, otherworldly setting, there is a juxtaposition from the grandiose visuals of the Thor universe met with the oddball Waititi humor that never fails to deliver. For the first time in a while, it feels like a director has taken command of the reins of a Marvel movie. Mind you, unlike most sequels to bad movies where they attempt to revise history or scrap previous entries, this film embraces all the story points from the last film but chooses to have a lot of fun with them.

The plot on its own could be a more straightforward tale: An evil villain (Cate Blanchett) who has a history at Asgard, enters into the fray with the intention of ruling over the entire galaxy. Thor (Chris Hemsworth), meanwhile, is thrown off guard again and lands on a junk-pile planet where, in order to escape, he must serve as a gladiator. Borrowing cues from throughout the decade, I'm struck with how well employed this '80s homage is--by setting it on a specific planet, it gives the entire universe a more layered feeling where certain places have different atmospheres than others. The balance between the two planets, the regal Asgard and the synthesized '80s-inspired second planet, is a great contrast and the variety makes the whole adventure a delightful romp.

Of the Marvel movies, the only one I can actively recall re-watching is the original Avengers. After viewing this film, I can safely say I'd be thrilled to relish in Thor: Ragnarok again. With its humor, vision and sincerity, the bar has been raised for what Marvel can accomplish, and I hope its look continues to invite more brilliant directors to jump into the fray.

Thor: Ragnarok is rated PG-13 for intense sequences of sci-fi violence and action, and brief suggestive material. 130 minutes. Now playing in theaters everywhere. •

"Every great film should seem new every time you see it."

World Series Loss Means More Heartache for Dodgers and Fans

By Adam Serrao

The World Series championship that has eluded the Los Angeles Dodgers for so long will have to wait at least another year to find itself a home in Southern California. A series filled with amazing victories, heartbreaking losses, incredible performances and gigantic meltdowns most likely could have gone back and forth for another seven games. Eventually, however, it ended in favor of the Houston Astros, as the American League team showed up on the road in the game that mattered most. The Dodgers will have a very long offseason to look back at what went wrong in the World Series. They'll also have an even longer 162-game regular season schedule to play in order to make another run at the team's first championship victory in what will now be 30 years of heartache.

Heartache probably can't begin to describe the feeling of Dodger fans everywhere as they watched their team quickly take a 5-0 deficit in the only Game 7 of the World Series that Los Angeles has ever been a part of in the team's local history. In the biggest moment of his career, on one of the grandest stages in the entire sports world, Dodgers pitcher Yu Darvish failed. The conclusion to a series that may have been among the most dramatic ever played ended in the most anticlimactic fashion possible as Los Angeles was out of the game and championship contention from what seemed to be the opening pitch.

Word came out days later that Darvish was tipping his pitches, meaning that batters like George Springer, Jose Altuve and Carlos Correa knew what was coming before the ball even reached home plate. It certainly looked that way. Much of the blame there can easily be placed on Darvish--a pitcher the Dodgers acquired for exactly this situation. How, though, as coaches, do you leave a pitcher who clearly doesn't have it out on the mound in the most important game of the year to give up five runs==especially after his last outing against the same Astros team in Game 3 in which he looked just as bad?

As far as blame goes, it can certainly be placed on Dave Roberts and the rest of the coaching staff for trusting too much in analytics and not in their own eyes. Many different questionable moves throughout the entirety of the World Series simply culminated in leaving Darvish out on the mound for far too long. That, combined with the way that the Dodgers' best players sulked and felt sorry for themselves from the second inning on, gave the team zero chance at pulling off a come-from-behind victory in a winner-take-all game in front of their home crowd.

Ten players left on base only began to tell the story of a team that clearly did not want it as much as the Houston Astros. Cody Bellinger--who looked as if he had been out partying too late for Halloween the night before--committed a brutal error to start the game when he inexplicably threw a fielded ground ball behind Darvish, who was covering first base, in a play that led to two runs and a massive momentum switch for Houston. Not only was the Los Angeles home crowd taken out of the game from that point forward, but Bellinger also proceeded to hurt the team at the plate. He struck out three times on the night and went 0-4, acting as the main, major hole in the lineup that led to almost zero offensive production for a team that still managed to obtain more hits than its counterparts in the final box score.

The Dodgers were 98-0 this season when having the lead after eight innings of play. Yet, in Game 2, Roberts left Jansen in for his second career six-out save attempt and the Dodgers wound up losing the game. The Dodgers were 100-1 in starts by Clayton Kershaw when he was given at least a four-run cushion. Kershaw gave up both a four-run lead and a three-run lead in Game 5 before being pulled in a loss that eventually saw the Dodgers go down 3-2 in the best of seven series. Theoretically, the Dodgers should have won five of the first six games played against the Astros, were it not for bad coaching decisions and All-Star players buckling under playoff pressure.

Putting the blame game aside, the Astros were simply the better team. They made more plays when it counted and fewer mistakes at key moments in the series.

For the Dodgers, they are now forced to once again focus on next year. How will the team get better so that it can finally take the next step forward and become champions instead of simply making it to the playoffs or the Fall Classic? Darvish, Logan Forsythe, Brandon Morrow and Chase Utley are all free agents, among others. Clayton Kershaw will be another year older, coming off of another year in which he was injured. Corey Seager may need surgery to repair his ailing elbow. Drama involving Adrian Gonzalez hovers around the team. All of those questionable situations, and more, surround a 104-win team that finished with the best record in baseball yet will be looking to improve upon a year that once again somehow ended in letdown.

The Dodger season went on for as long as it possibly could have this year, providing the team's fans with a maximum amount of entertainment value. The year may have ended with a loss and in disappointment, but the memories of joy, elation, excitement and accomplishment will remain. The only thing to do now is to focus attention toward next season. The Dodgers have been through three decades of baseball that have all ultimately ended in disappointment. Los Angeles and the team's fans will once again look forward to next year in order to finally rid the franchise of all of its surrounding regret. •

Martian Ridge Brings Out Rover’s Color-Distinguishing Capabilities

Based on a Press Release from JPL, Provided by Bob Eklund

Color-discerning capabilities that NASA’s Curiosity rover has been using on Mars since 2012 are proving particularly helpful on a mountainside ridge the rover is now climbing.

These capabilities go beyond the thousands of full-color images Curiosity takes every year: The rover can look at Mars with special filters helpful for identifying some minerals, and also with a spectrometer that sorts light into thousands of wavelengths, extending beyond visible-light colors into infrared and ultraviolet. These observations aid decisions about where to drive and investigations of chosen targets.

One of these methods for discerning targets’ colors uses the Mast Camera (Mastcam); the other uses the Chemistry and Camera instrument (ChemCam).

Each of the Mastcam’s two eyes—one telephoto and one wider angle—has several science filters that can be changed from one image to the next to assess how brightly a rock reflects light of specific colors. By design, some of the filters are for diagnostic wavelengths that certain minerals absorb, rather than reflect. Hematite, one iron-oxide mineral detectable with Mastcam’s science filters, is a mineral of prime interest as the rover examines Vera Rubin Ridge.

“We’re in an area where this capability of Curiosity has a chance to shine,” said Abigail Fraeman of NASA’s Jet Propulsion Laboratory, Pasadena, California, who leads planning for the mission’s investigation of Vera Rubin Ridge.

a planned destination for Curiosity before the rover landed five years ago. Spectrometer observations from orbit revealed hematite here. Most hematite forms in the presence of water, and the mission focuses on clues about wet environments in Mars’ ancient past. It found evidence during the first year after landing that some ancient Martian environments offered conditions favorable for life. As the mission continues, it is studying how those conditions varied and changed.

Curiosity’s ChemCam is best known for zapping rocks with a laser to identify chemical elements in them, but it also can examine targets near and far without use of the laser. It does this by measuring sunlight reflected by the targets in thousands of wavelengths. Some patterns in this spectral data can identify hematite or other minerals.

“The colors of the rocks on the ridge are more interesting and more variable than what we saw earlier in Curiosity’s traverse,” said science team member Jeffrey Johnson of the Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory, Laurel, Maryland. He uses both Mastcam and ChemCam data for analyzing rocks.

Hematite occurs at sufficiently small grain sizes in rocks found at this part of Mars to preferentially absorb some wavelengths of green light. This gives it a purplish tint in standard color images from Curiosity, due to more reflection of redder and bluer light than reflection of the green wavelengths. The additional color-discerning capabilities of Mastcam and ChemCam show hematite even more clearly.

“As we approached the ridge and now as we’re climbing it, we’ve been trying to tie what was detected from orbit to what we can learn on the ground,” said Curiosity science team member Danika Wellington of Arizona State University, Tempe. “It’s still very much a work in progress. The extent to which iron-bearing minerals here are oxidized relates to the history of interactions between water and rock.”

Vera Rubin Ridge is named for astronomer Vera Rubin (1926-2016), who confirmed the existence of dark matter. • favorite time of day. He loves treats, especially when his foster mom shares some juicy morsels of chicken with him or gives him a few pieces of tuna. Cashmere also loves to play with cat toys--batting toy mice in the air, tossing balls across the room and zooming across the floor to catch them. Napping in the cat tree beside the window and basking in the sun are also two of his favorite pastimes. Cashmere has never been around other cats, so he would do best in a single cat household. He did grow up around a dog and may adjust to another cat-friendly dogs.

Oliver is a happy, friendly lap cat looking for his forever home. He likes to spend his days napping in the sunshine while sprawled across the bed or curled up on the top shelf of the cat tree. His favorite time of day is when he sits and watches TV with his foster mom. At bedtime, Oliver loves to quietly lie beside his foster mom as she sleeps. Please come meet Oliver and see what a sweet boy he truly is.

Linus is the sweetest, most loving furry ball you'll ever meet. He loves being the center of human attention and is good with big and small humans alike. Linus loves to cuddle and purrs to the touch. With his laid-back charm, he is happy as long as he is getting love and attention from humans. He also loves to play with other kitties once they understand who is the boss....which is definitely Linus, as he is a bit of an alpha. He would enjoy having a home with his sister Lucy or would likely get along with a cat-friendly dog after an appropriate integration period.

Jody is a friendly, fun-loving guy. He is full of spunk and loves to scamper around, play with toys and his sibling, and is always looking for some fun. Jody currently lives with several dogs and cats and loves most of them. Because young cats like him do so much better with a buddy, he should be adopted with his sister Jill (a cute little black and white girl), whom he adores and has not been separated
