Two-Legged: How Wolves Change Lives at The Shadowland Foundation

By Chase Maser Photos by Ariel Romeo Davis

Paul Pondella couldn't fill out a job application.

His dyslexia was too overwhelming, and at the age of 18, he was kicked out of high school. Two weeks later, in 1978, he was arrested for growing marijuana. Standing in front of the judge, he was given a choice: hosts on-site events and programs to educate people about wolves.

Colette serves as Co-founder and Program Director of Shadowland, but her affinity for wolves began when she met Paul outside of a spiritual center.

"We were friends for about a month," says Colette, "but we had similar stories of how our marriages ended and I felt bad for him." "Now, I don't know if that's what they were supposed to do or not, but the energy of the forest spoke to me and brought Kiva and I together. That's when I realized, too, that this was something I needed to bring back to the community to educate people about." There are four different programs that the get a job or go to prison.

Paul played baseball during school. He was an all-star for 12 of the 13 years he played, and remembering that McDonald's was one of his team sponsors in the past, he found a contact and met for an interview. The manager was happy to see him. Right away, he gave Paul a free meal and an application to fill out, but panic set in.

"I was so embarrassed that I couldn't read the application," says Paul.

"I snuck out of the restaurant and left the food there, too. Then I went back home and the only place I knew where to go next was outside. I couldn't apply for a job, but I had enough courage to go and knock on neighbors' doors to ask if I could mow their lawns and clean their yards."

So after a failed interview at McDonald's, Tree King Tree Service was born and it evolved from there.

Located in Lake Hughes, CA, Paul and his wife, Colette Duvall Pondella, run the Shadowland Foundation—a non-profit that Before crossing paths with Colette, Paul went through a whirlwind of trauma despite becoming an arborist and building a successful business.

As a young man, he struggled with alcohol and drug addiction, but that didn't keep him from working hard. Out on the job, he would often get calls from clients to remove cats and iguanas from trees. Even the SPCA would enlist him to help with rescue efforts in the Angeles Forest, and one day in the early 1980s, he got a call to rescue a wolf-husky mix that was sick with Canine Parvovirus.

"Everyone said to have it put down, but I took it to a veterinarian that I knew and he treated her—she lived. Her name was Panda and she was amazing, but time with the fourleggeds expires way too quickly," says Paul.

After Panda died, Paul was called once again to the Angeles Forest in the early 90s to rescue a timber wolf named Kiva.

"We rescued her and I asked animal control what I was supposed to do, but they just turned and walked away," Paul explains. . .

Your Neighborhood Therapist

Dear Neighborhood Therapist,

I have been at my job for eight years. I used to really like it. When I first started, I was doing the kind of work I had always hoped to do. I still do some of that work, and I like my clients, but there has been a lot of turnover in these eight years, and it is an entirely different workplace from the one I joined. Now, the atmosphere is poisoned with backstabbing careerists, and that's just not me. The idea of talking to my boss and some of my co-workers terrifies me. I get actual nightmares. My income and the health insurance my job provides are both important to our family, but I don't know if I can take the stress anymore. It's affecting my physical health and our family life. It breaks my heart that the company I used to love has changed so much. I don't know what to do. - Between a Rock and

Hard Place, El Segundo

Dear Rock and a Hard Place,

Sometimes, if we are lucky in our work and career, we hit the trifecta: a job that pays the bills, offers work we find fulfilling, and has co-workers whom we like and respect. We too often undervalue this last aspect of our work life. Work you love can be ruined by the wrong people around you. Having the right people around you can make hard jobs more tolerable. You were lucky and caught lightning in a bottle, but organizations change just like people do. It sounds like you entered this job in good faith, and willingly gave it a part of yourself only to be betrayed years later. This stinks.

It is also something that happens with human relationships, and thinking of this as a relationship is a helpful way to consider your dilemma. People often stay in relationships because so much of their identity is connected to what used to be the good parts. Eight years ago when you joined, you were happy to associate yourself with the job you did and the people around you. Now it's toxic. How can you square that? You can't. Nobody can, but we all try because we have invested so much, and it adds to the anxiety.

You hit on something important. Keep hammering at this: the place has changed. The place has changed. The place has changed. You are not the organization you work for. You don't share values. This is not what you signed up for. It is not who you are.

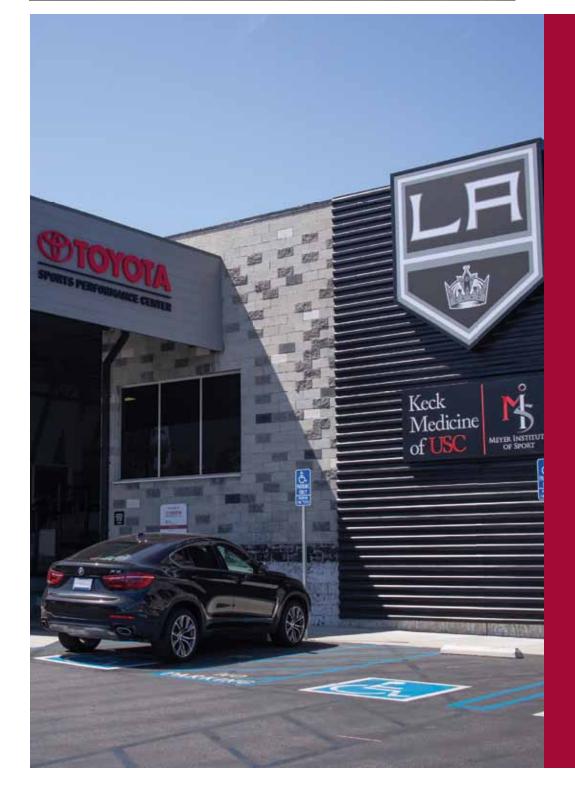

Only you will know if you should stay or quit. You may be stuck in a situation that you are powerless to change at least in the shortterm. People stay in bad relationships or bad jobs for all kinds of reasons, including survival. You may find that in today's uncertain work environment, leaving is too risky, even in spite of the damage the job is doing.

Many of us, at some point in our lives, find ourselves in situations where none of our options allow us to be our best selves. No matter what, remember you said this about your situation: "That's just not me." You know who you are, and this job is not it.

It's also not forever.

Kyle Myers Enjoying his Fun Life

By Gregg McMullin

In every graduating class, you'll find some very influential students. They will be standout students who get involved with the ASB. Others will be active in drama, the band, choir or clubs. Then there are those who made their mark as outstanding athletes. Kyle Myers is one of those students who was influential in an all-around way. A friend to all, he will be remembered as a down to earth person who was funny.

When you first meet Kyle, you'll notice he is not flashy, outspoken, or one that craves attention. You are drawn to his innocence and his shy demeanor that lightens the room with his funny disposition. Kyle reminds you of someone you need to be friends with because he makes everyone around him feel important.

Kyle says his favorite class is AVID, which stands for Advancement via Individual Determination. AVID helps prepare students for college by getting them to try more challenging courses, and by getting them to think more in-depth about their future. He's been in AVID all four years and says it was the best decision he's ever made to enroll. He says the class was so important to him that it was like a second family, and he made life-long friends. "My favorite teacher was His basketball coach, David March, was impressed with Kyle and said, "He was one of the hardest working and toughest players I ever coached. Kyle epitomizes what El Segundo basketball is all about." Kyle was the team's Defensive Player of the Year his senior year.

On the football field, Kyle, a two-year starter, used his speed and knack for being a defensive standout. His legendary football coach, Steve Shevlin, says he could always count on Kyle. "Kyle's football IQ was high, and he stood out because of his competitiveness." Coach Shevlin went on to say that Kyle was as intense as an athlete he's had and, "he embraced competition."

Kyle, who tied a school record for interceptions in a game, was a decorated football player. He was a unanimous first-team All-Ocean League Defensive team selection his senior year. He was also voted his team's Most Versatile Player with his Special Teams skills as a punt and kick returner; he was also a receiver on offense.

Each of his baseball, football and basketball coaches said essentially the same. Kyle could be counted on to make a difference when the game was on the line. Kyle says that more than anything, "Playing sports has taught

Kyle Myers was the team's Defensive Player of the Year.

Mr. (Jim) Whalen in AVID because he has taught me a lot about school and life."

Kyle is like other students going through these uncertain times. He stays in touch with his friends online and the typical social media outlets. He says he's been using voice calls more and more these days too. He admits to playing an online game with friends, "We play Call to Duty for entertainment and stay connected."

Kyle has been a good student throughout his four years of high school. He will take an impressive 3.6 GPA to San Marcos State to study Business Management. His AVID teacher, Mr. Whalen, says, "Kyle embodies the AVID spirit, which is to bring your determination to succeed but to do it in a team framework. Kyle is a key component of a strong AVID class of 38 graduates this year. I cannot imagine his classmates feel anything but respect for him because he is a guy who shows care and concern for others." Kyle comes from an athletic family, so naturally, he was interested in sports. His grandfather, Jerry Filson, was one of his class' top athletes. He was a two-year starter for the baseball team that won back-to-back CIF championships. In his only year of playing baseball as a freshman, Kyle became the lead-off batter and played centerfield. Kyle also played basketball, football and ran track. Kyle played basketball and football for all four years and ran track his sophomore year. Kyle's love for basketball was noticeable, and he was one of the team's leaders on each team he played on.

me responsibility, teamwork, and integrity. Also, to be successful, you have to work together as a team."

The hardest thing for any high school athlete is when it's all over and knowing they won't be playing competitively anymore. Kyle says he'll miss his teammates, coaches, the discipline of being an athlete and the bonds of friendships he's made with so many. Those friendships he's made will last a lifetime, he says.

Besides being a standout athlete and student

Kyle is a talented singer, according to choir teacher Gianna Summers. With his busy sports schedule, he didn't have the opportunity or time to pursue his vocal talents.

Kyle is succinct when it comes to his goals after high school. "I'd like to finish college and have fun doing it." He says he knows the college environment will be a challenge, and he's ready to embrace the next chapter of his life. He added that he's hoping to be successful and live comfortably after getting his degree.

What will his classmates remember about him at future reunions? He was a down-toearth, nice, friendly, and funny guy who had fun enjoying his life. •

Within all of these programs, Paul and Colette lead by two principles: FAITH and HOPE.

"If you spell the word faith, F-A-I-T-H— Finding Answers In The Heart—and when you learn to live from the heart's energy, you can then ask yourself, 'Okay, how do I make this work?" From there, you then move onto hope, H-O-P-E—Helping Other People Evolve,"

Yes–You Should be Watching Netflix's New Jazz Drama Series, The Eddy

By Ryan Rojas, Executive Editor, Cinemacy

Note for note, The Eddy nails how life, in all of its free-spirited, surprising–and at it's darker core, chaotic and uncontrollable– moments, is like the beautiful harmony of jazz music.

And no other current filmmaker makes that musical leap to film better than Damien episode follows a different character). But beyond all that, The Eddy is really at its best when the story builds to a musical sequence, at which point it stops to sink into the best jazz jams you've heard, and all from the walls of a real Parisian nightclub (and really, is there anything better than being transported to the heart of Paris while we're all locked down right now?). From the band's on-stage

The Eddy, courtesy of Netflix.

Chazelle, who first splashed onto the scene with 2014's Whiplash, only to follow that with the Hollywood musical throwback La La Land, which made Chazelle the youngest Best Director winner in Oscars history. With his newest project, Chazelle side-steps narrative features to get into the mini-series game, here making an 8 episode story for Netflix (now streaming). Centered around American nightclub owner and previously prodigious pianist, The Eddy (the name of the club) tells the story of Elliot (Andreé Holland) trying to save his Parisian nightclub, as well as his band and singer (Joanna Kulig) from going under. Throw in a newly transplanted daughter (Amandla Sternberg) and a mob that's come around to settle their debts, and you get a show that's exciting, gripping, dramatic, and visually stunning (the series was shot on 16mm film, which lends a grain not typical for Netflix or any streamer).

Fans of the director will have already noticed how Chazelle centers his stories around gifted artists whose attempts to achieve greatness through their craft often consume their realities, and audiences will be happy to see similar themes here, with Holland's heartfelt performance driving the show (although each jams, to spontaneous musical moments that sprout up like weeds on the streets, you're going to find yourself rewinding, sitting breathlessly, and snapping to the rhythms from the comfort of your couch.

The Eddy proves that life is just better in the key of Damien Chazelle. 'The Eddy' is now streaming on Netflix. Ryan is an El Segundo native and is the Executive Editor of Cinemacy, read more of his reviews, features and interviews at www.cinemacy.com. •

We are so fortunate here at spcaLA to have a strong team of caring and compassionate volunteers. That passion for animals goes outside of their volunteer hours, too. A volunteer from spcaLA South Bay, Antonio, had found a stray orange Tabby cat and brought him in to us. The cat, later named

Roger, during his lost pet holding period, he received food, medical care, and TLC. During that time, Antonio called regularly checkedin on Roger, wanting to make sure his little friend was doing okay. Well, today Antonio made it official and adopted Roger! Seems like it was meant to be from the beginning. •

Congratulations to Roger and his new family.
