ES Firefighter Goes on Amazing Run to Honor Fallen Hotshots

Over the course of just over a week, El Segundo Firefighter Jose Firemamjoe Zambrano ran an astounding 380 miles (the equivalent of nearly 15 marathons!) in full turnout gear despite the blazing summer heat all the way from the LA County Fire Museum in Bellflower, Calif, to the Granite Mountain Hotshot Memorial in Yarnell, Ariz. Zambrano did this to honor the 19 Granite Mountain Hotshots who lost their lives protecting the community of Yarnell five years ago. In the process, he also raised funds to support @explorersforlife in honor of Granite Mountain Hotshot Firefighter Kevin Woyjeck from Southern California. The photo shows Zambrano (in both baseball and fire gear) at a recent LA Angels game where he caught the first pitch thrown out by the sole survivor of the Yarnell Hill fire, Brendan McDonough (wearing the Angel cap). City Council Approves Police Recruitment Incentive Campaign

By Brian Simon

With the July 3 meeting canceled due to its close proximity to a major holiday, the El Segundo City Council (minus the absent Don Brann) held a special morning session last week to tackle a few timely matters before the group next reconvenes on the 17th. The main impetus for the gathering was to expedite final approval of code amendments in the local Corporate Office (CO) Zone to allow dry cleaning services in that part of town and pave the way for a particular applicant for that business category to open his store sooner than later (late June instead of the last half of July). The code changes also will permit parcel shipping, printing and business centers such as Fed-Ex, Kinko's and UPS Store, as well as self-service delivery (i.e. Amazon locker) in the CO Zone.

Otherwise, the Council also adopted a resolution establishing financial incentives to recruit police officers to the city and to procure a marketing firm to help put the word out to prospective employees. Police Chief Bill Whalen spoke of a staffing shortage that is now at eight below funded levels (54 sworn instead of 62), with concerns that personnel numbers will continue to drop over the next two years with several possible retirements not to mention the normal attrition and injury leaves.

Whalen lauded a recently approved cadet program as a way of building a "farm league" similar to an ROTC to bring in potential officers at a young age with an education bonus available as a way to keep them here after the two-year mark. At that point, the goal is to have the cadets commit to the department and then gain exposure to various elements of the job (e.g. geographic orientation and report writing) so that they are already ahead of the curve by the time they graduate from academy -- and can then focus on more advanced components of their training.

While recruiting entry level officers is a major element of the campaign, Whalen explained that outreach to lateral officers will be vital to rebuild the department in the short term. Lateral officers are those currently employed within another California law enforcement agency and who possess a CA POST BASIC certificate. Successful lateral candidates will now receive a $25,000 bonus if hired by El Segundo Police Department (ESPD). The previous incentive for laterals was only $3,000.

Fire Marshal Carver Still Inspires Long After Near-Death Experience

By Brian Simon

During the interview with longtime City of El Segundo Fire Marshal James Carver, he said something that you just don't hear very often during the average day: "You know, I have a fire hydrant named after me," he beamed. Well, it seems that Chevron (one of many notable local companies that deal with him on a regular basis) made a special hydrant for its underground loop and they call it "The Carver." He also has a replica of it on his desk that is much heavier than it looks. "Go on, try to lift it," he said. It wasn't easy...

Carver feels he is fortunate to walk into his office every day and see that hydrant because if not for some quick thinking and prompt response back in 2010, he would not be with us today. In December of that year while working in his garage and feeling unusually tired over the previous couple of days, he fell and started gasping for breath. His son Brian, who learned CPR as a middle schooler and worked for an ambulance company in Orange County, turned him over and called 9-1-1. The elder Carver then stopped breathing and Brian promptly began to administer CPR. That bought just enough time for paramedics to arrive a few minutes later and conduct four defibrillations to revive a man who had for

El Camino Breaks Ground on New Pool, Classroom Complex

El Camino College celebrated the ground-breaking of the new Pool and Classroom Complex on June 18. Construction has begun on this $48.7 million, 81,200-square-foot-facility, which will feature two fully equipped, spectator-friendly indoor pools for instructional use and athletic competition for the El Camino College swim, diving and water polo teams.

“Our facilities bonds are making many campuswide upgrades possible, including our new Pool and Classroom Complex,” said El Camino College President Dena P. Maloney. “Once again, we thank our community for supporting El Camino College.”

A rim-flow gutter system will be built into the competition pool, and skimmers will be installed at the wellness pool, which is designed for adaptive classes. The 35-meter competition pool has two 1-meter diving boards and one 3-meter board, as well as a state-of-the-art timing system for swim meets and practice.

In addition, the complex includes five classrooms, two fitness multipurpose rooms, an adapted PE laboratory/classroom, state-of-the-art fitness center, and weight training room. Student locker rooms and aquatics team rooms are also part of the plan, along with the Division of Health Sciences and Athletics office, faculty offices and other essential support spaces.

All windows in the building will be energy efficient, providing natural lighting throughout the building. Drought-tolerant landscaping will be planted around the complex, requiring minimal irrigation. Reclaimed water will be used in landscaped areas. The new Pool and Classroom Complex is funded by the 2012 Measure E Facilities Bond.

LAX United Airlines Project Public Workshop

A public workshop will be held on Tuesday, July 31 from 5:30-7:30 p.m. at the Westchester-Loyola Village Branch Library (7114 W. Manchester Ave., Los Angeles 90045) for the LAX United Airlines (UAL) Aircraft Maintenance and Ground Support Equipment (GSE) Project.

The project would consolidate and modernize existing UAL aircraft maintenance and GSE facilities at LAX. UAL proposes to redevelop its existing eastern facility to consolidate all of UAL’s aircraft and GSE maintenance activities. The project would redevelop an approximately 35-acre site in the eastern portion of the airport operations area with a new facility totaling approximately 411,000 square feet. The project site is in the eastern portion of LAX at 6000-6016 and 6020-6024 Avion Drive, east of Sepulveda Boulevard and south of Century Boulevard. Implementation would result in significant and unavoidable impacts to historical resources and construction-related air quality. Impacts to cumulative construction traffic would be less than significant with mitigation. All other impacts would be less than significant. For a complete description of the proposed project and environmental documents, go to <https://www.lawa.org/en/lawa-our-lax>.

High Interest in Space Tourism

By Rob McCarthy

The success of private space exploration companies such as SpaceX in Hawthorne hasn't gone unnoticed by travelers looking to expand their horizons and come back with more than a t-shirt.

A new poll of Americans reveals a high number would ride aboard a space vehicle and endure the rigors of liftoff and a return to Earth. Four in 10 people said they'd consider making the voyage into space despite some strong doubts space tourism will become a reality within the next 50 years.

Pew Research Center asked Americans their views about the new space race, both for exploration and pure fun. Among people most interested in traveling into space, 45 percent say they'd go up for the unique experience. Another 29 percent want to sightsee and specifically look down at the Earth.

Elon Musk of SpaceX, Amazon founder Jeff Bezos and Virgin Airlines' Richard Branson are huge backers of the new space race. They and their space flight companies are testing reusable rockets and space vehicles they hope someday will ferry passengers around the Earth and back safely.

Becoming a space traveler isn't for the majority of Americans, based on the poll results. An overwhelming number -- 58 percent -- said their bucket lists don't include a flight that orbits Earth. The cost of a ticket and the perceived danger makes such a trip impossible to imagine for many of them. Others said they're too old or not healthy enough to make that kind of trip.

If the days comes when manned space vehicles fly like commercial jetliners, more men than women are ready for departure. About half the men (51 percent) say they would be interested in orbiting the Earth in a spacecraft, compared with one-third of women. The men who aren't interested in going to space think it would be too expensive. The women believe the dangers outweigh the adventure, according to the poll results.

The interest in being a space traveler is highest among young Americans born between 1981 and 1996. An impressive 63 percent of the millennials told Pew they would definitely or probably be interested in going up in space for a look-see.

People in the survey were evenly divided on whether space tourism will happen in the next half-century. Americans were even more skeptical about the possibility that mankind would build colonies on other planets by 2068. Still, there are believers out there.

Almost one-third of the people polled envision colonies on other planets within 50 years. That aligns with Musk's belief that millions of people could be living on Mars around 2060. He raised the ante last September when he told attendees at a space conference in Australia that the first human visitors to the red planet could reach Mars as early as 2024.

Public attitudes about space exploration and who will drive future missions are changing, the poll numbers reveal. While Americans who profess to be interested in news about space are confident that private companies will contribute to the U.S. space program, a solid two-thirds don't want space exploration to be privatized. Two-thirds of Americans polled said it is essential that NASA continue to be involved in space exploration.

President Trump has set a goal for NASA to return astronauts to the moon, where the space agency could build a relay station to support the more ambitious missions to Mars. The agency announced last year it has plans to build a facility called the Deep Space Gateway on the moon. The structure could serve as a way station between the Earth and the Red Planet -- a nine-month trip between the planets using the fastest rocket NASA has in operation.

Will space be a profitable venture for SpaceX and the other transporters? Americans feel sure they can, and believe these private companies are well-managed and will control their costs enough to make meaningful contributions to the exploration of space in this century. NASA currently uses them as contractors to lift satellites into orbit and make supply runs to the international space station.

NASA will send up another rover to Mars in two years as part of the agency's ongoing exploration of the planet. "The Mars 2020 mission addresses high-priority science goals for Mars exploration, including key questions about the potential for life on Mars," NASA said. The next Rover mission is designed to demonstrate technologies that "address the challenges of future human expeditions to Mars." They include a method for producing oxygen from the Martian atmosphere, identifying water beneath the surface, and improving landing techniques. NASA also wants to study weather, dust and other environmental conditions that could affect future astronauts living and working on Mars. •

Silent Destroyers: Tips To Spot Termites And Prevent Infestation

(BPT) - There are many reasons that termites have gained the nickname "silent destroyers." Five billion reasons, in fact.

Termites cause more than $5 billion in property damage in the U.S. each year. If left unchecked, they can silently chew through the structural stability of a home, eating away at wood, flooring and even wallpaper. To make matters worse, the damage they leave behind is not typically covered by most homeowners' insurance policies.

Spring is prime time for termite populations as they emerge in search of new structures to invade. Termite explorers, referred to as swarmers, will look for hospitable homes, and are particularly attracted to structures that may have sustained damage from severe winter weather or have dead or decaying wood on the property.

Many people will see termite swarmers in homes during the spring and mistake them for flying ants; this can end up being a costly mistake. Winged termites have a straight waist, straight antennae and their wings are equal in size. Flying ants, on the other hand, have waists that are pinched in the middle, bent antennae and two sets of wings, with the top set being larger than the lower. Termites are also most likely to swarm in the spring, while flying ants may swarm at various times of the year.

It is not always possible for an untrained eye tubes to provide moisture while they travel between their colony and food source. Mud tubes are most often found near the home's foundation.

Wood damage - Termites tend to eat wood from the inside out, so wood that sounds hollow when tapped often signifies a termite infestation. Homeowners should also look for blistering pieces of wood.

Frass - Drywood termites produce wood-colored droppings as they eat through infested wood.

It's a good rule of thumb to have your home inspected for termites once every two to three years, and every year if you live in the south or in warmer climates.

The good news is that there are plenty of ways homeowners can help protect against termites, while in turn, protecting their greatest investment - their home. The National Pest Management Association (NPMA) offers this termite advice:

* Eliminate or reduce moisture in and around the home, which termites need in order to thrive.

* Repair leaking faucets, water pipes and exterior AC units.

* Repair fascia, soffits and rotted roof shingles.

* Replace weather stripping and loose mortar around basement foundation and windows.

* Divert water away from the house through properly functioning downspouts, gutters and splash blocks.

* Monitor all exterior areas of wood, including windows, doorframes and skirting boards for any noticeable changes. Remove dead trees and replace rotting wood.

* Maintain an 18-inch gap between soil or mulch and any wood portions of your home.

* Consider scheduling a professional inspection annually. Wood-boring insect damage is not covered by homeowners' insurance policies.

* Store firewood at least 20 feet away from the house.

Termites cannot be controlled with do-it-yourself measures. If you suspect a termite infestation, contact a licensed pest control professional immediately to determine the extent of the problem and receive a recommendation of an appropriate course of treatment. Aquatics Swim Club Going Strong

Story and Photos by Gregg McMullin

El Segundo has been home to Olympic water polo and swim teams in the 1950s and 1960s. El Segundo High School has produced numerous CIF Southern Section boys and girls water polo and swim champions. The dominance in the pool can be traced to feeder systems like the aquatics programs at Urho Saari Swim Stadium.

The swim stadium was named after the legendary coach who helped guide water polo and swim teams to 18 CIF titles, including 12 in water polo and six in swimming in an illustrious 36-year career. Coach Saari had a vision of how a successful program should be run. During his time as a nationally recognized coach, he instituted a feeder system that included an aquatics program that helped train future L.A. County Department of Beaches Lifeguards.

Over the years a number of feeder programs have been started, including Alpha Aquatics. It was founded in the fall of 2014 by two-time Venezuelan Olympian Coach Octavio Alesi. From the start, his goal was to provide high-quality swim training with an up-to-date philosophy to youths interested in aquatics programs. In four years, Alpha Aquatics has established itself as one of Southern California's top USA Swimming clubs. Home to national- and international-level swimmers, some of their athletes have gone to compete at various universities/colleges (Fordham, Loyola Marymount, Cal Lutheran, and Dartmouth). It is thought that this swim club will be another feeder program to El Segundo High.

Alpha Aquatics thrives to positively impact the swimmer's experience in the water regardless of level. In the process, every member will have an equal opportunity to succeed both in the pool and in life.

Twice a year, Alpha Aquatics hosts an intra-club meet to give the athletes a day of friendly competition. With nearly 70 locals participating, the following athletes stood out with multiple first place finishes in their respective events (age is highlighted): Jason Pierce (8), four first place finishes (freestyle/backstroke); Jasper Shimon (9), three first place finishes (breaststroke/IM); Sora Koike (9), three first place finishes (IM/freestyle); Sofie Szigeti (12), three first place finishes (freestyle/breaststroke); and Devin Bernardin (12), two first place finishes (backstroke/freestyle). Kent Nishida (12) won the butterfly/freestyle, Giovanni Wheeler (12) had two top finishes (freestyle/butterfly), Evan Yoo (14) had two first place finishes (breaststroke/freestyle) and Katrina Mortenson (15) won the breaststroke/butterfly.

The Alpha Aquatics Swim Club held its summer intra-club swim meet that attracted big crowds.

There are three groups for training: Racing Development (ages 6 – 12) serves as an introduction to all strokes and basic training skills. The Juniors Group (ages 9-12) works intensively on technique, participating in local meets and Junior Lifeguards competitions while preparing for the Senior Group. The Senior Group trains for local-, national- and international-level swim meets as well as high school season and Junior Lifeguards. For more information, contact Coach Alesi at oalesi@gmail.com or visit www.AlphaAquatics.net.

El Segundo Little League All Stars Update

The El Segundo Little League 11/12 All Star teams have been playing in the District 36 playoffs to start their march towards a successful tournament run. The All Stars defeated Lunada Bay 14-4 to punch their ticket to the District 36 Championship Game at Brett Field on Saturday July 7 at noon.

The 10/11 All Stars lost a heartbreaker to Manhattan Beach Little League 3-2. It was their first lost in the tournament, but they rebounded to defeat beat Rolling Hills 9-4. Aaron Newman got the win, going three innings and allowing two runs. El Segundo got timely hitting from Grady Lubs, who went 2-4 with a two-run double. Sean Mossman went 2-4, Reed Abrams 2-3, Ethan Ayler 1-4 with a double, and Ryan Zarneke 1-2.

Newman got support with great relief pitching from Reed Abrams and Ben Lee, filiation with a professional team was as the third base coach for the Philadelphia Phillies in 1972 after 58 years in pro ball.

When Lars Nootbaar signed his contract with the St. Louis Cardinals, he became the 54th former El Segundo High School athlete to play pro baseball. And with it, he extends the streak of 84 consecutive years with an Eagle alum in professional baseball.

Nootbaar was assigned to the State College Spikes of the short season Class-A New York-Penn League. He has been playing one of the corner outfield positions and has the second most at-bats of the outfielders on the team.

Another former Eagle, Sean Emery, is making a name for himself playing in the Palm Springs Collegiate League. The PSCL is considered one of the top showcase collegiate leagues in the nation. Games are played at 9 a.m. daily during the seven-week season. Emery, who plays for the California Grizzly, is the team's third-leading hitter at .354 -- just four points behind the team leader. Emery is first in at-bats, second on the team in hits and second in slugging percentage at .500. For his efforts, he has been selected to play in the All Star game. • all intents and purposes died. Carver became one of several hundred thousand Americans who experience out-of-hospital sudden death cardiac arrests each year.

Since that time, Carver has survived five other "events" in which the pacemaker/defibrillator that doctors eventually installed after the initial incident had to shock his heart back into rhythm. "I would probably be five times dead [if I didn't have one of these]," he said pointing to his chest. "But I wouldn't have gotten past the first time if my son didn't know CPR."

Carver's story remains an inspiration for him to continue emphasizing the importance of CPR training, which El Segundo highlights during the annual springtime CPR Saturday as well as through an in-house program. He helmed the first event back in 1995 and continued to do so annually (other than one year) until this spring when he turned leadership duties over to paramedics Adam Kruse and Mark Lees who also conduct the training. Though Carver was on-hand for the proceedings, he stepped back to allow others to get more involved. "I'm hoping to retire in a couple of years," he said. "So this is part of the succession plan."

It will be a big set of footsteps to follow once Carver does wrap up his career with the El Segundo Fire Department. His tenure here began in 1991, but the story goes back much further. The Hawthorne native and Leuzinger High graduate already knew for sure as a teen that he wanted to become a firefighter. After spending several years in the Explorers program (for those between the ages of 15-21 interested in fire service careers), he worked at several odd jobs before landing a firefighter position at Northrop in Pico Rivera as a firefighter dealing mainly with medical calls and some industrial blazes. Thankfully, there weren't many of the latter, but he did once have somewhat of a close call trying to extinguish a flaming shredding machine.

Upon arrival in El Segundo, Carver started out as an inspector for eight years and then earned the promotion to principal fire prevention specialist. He rose to his current rank in 2006, overseeing the Fire Prevention Division with two full-time staff members. Responsibilities include conducting annual fire inspection programs for all commercial (especially high- and mid-rise structures as well as factories) and multi-residential buildings, reviewing technical plans for all proposed construction, inspecting any new construction and tenant improvements, investigating fires to determine origin and cause, and handling public outreach and education programs. For a hectic stretch of time, he also managed the City's CUPA program (hazardous waste and environmental safety regulations). "They eventually hired someone else to handle that," Carver reported. "I was really busy for a while."

Especially in recent years, Carver has seen advances in technology that make continuing education paramount to keep up with new codes and equipment. "The job is becoming more technical every day," he said. "For instance, there used to be three types of sprinkler heads. Now there are 20. And now you have smoke detectors, CO2 detectors and heat detectors all in one unit. You can't test things like you used to. You need special devices."

As commercial activity increases in town, Carver also looks over plans and meets with those who want to develop properties. Promoting fire safety is a critical element of every conversation and a big part of what he feels makes his job most rewarding. "It's important to educate people in doing the fire-safe thing in either design or actual application," Carver said. "It really makes a difference."

The topic of making a difference inevitably found its way back to CPR, as Carver urged local citizens to get training to learn to react quickly during the early stages of a medical emergency. "Everybody I tell about what happened to me, I can see that they're affected by it," he said. "If spreading the message can help save even one other life, it's worth everything."

In fact, Carver's tale came up recently at his son's wedding when the best man recounted the events of that night in 2010. Minutes later, there were very few dry eyes left in the room. "I was crying, my wife was crying and I had to get up and give a speech next," Carver said. "Later on, one of the bridesmaids came up to me crying and thanked me for being willing to talk about it. If my story tells you nothing else...learn CPR, have your family learn CPR so you'll know what to do. Most times when a person has a heart attack or cardiac arrest, a family member is there."

When he finally turns in his badge in 2020, Carver will leave as the longest tenured prevention employee on the civilian side in El Segundo history. He already knows he will miss the camaraderie of staff that he considers "family" and a community that has been nothing but supportive. "I'm just happy to still be here and will continue to try to help people for as long as I can," he said. •

Joaquin Phoenix Plays a Brutal Contract Killer in Arthouse Film

By Ryan Rojas
for www.cinemacy.com

In the life of a contract killer, one is required to maintain complete control in the midst of chaos in order to stay alive. Now add in the variable of companionship, and this contingency becomes a vulnerability and jeopardizing to one's life. This is the synopsis of director Lynne Ramsay's provocative arthouse film, You Were Never Really Here. You Were Never Really Here is the story limits of their comfort zones to show the depths of wickedness of which the human species is capable. Her 2011 film, We Need to Talk About Kevin, revealed a depth of sin that borders on demonic. While Ramsay again displays the depravity of human behavior in You Were Never Really Here, she seems more intent on exploring how people get to become broken and how innocence can become lost at the earliest of ages. When Joe sees Nina experience horrors first-hand, he

of a murder-for-hire killer, Joe (Joaquin Phoenix), who lives a life of dark solace in modern-day New York City. A burly bear of a man, Joe is silent and consumed with his own thoughts -- blending into the city background during the daylight hours before operating in the night shadows as a monastic mercenary. His lifestyle appears to be easy except for the fact that Joe must care for his aging mother (Judith Roberts), whose home he returns to between jobs so that he can tend to her in her declining mental state. One day, a new job pops up -- to locate the daughter of a high-profile senator. Except in this case, finding the girl, Nina (Ekaterina Samsonov), doesn't mean the end of the job. Joe soon realizes that he has waded into the criminal underbelly of child trafficking, coordinated at the highest levels. When the job goes south, Joe must decide whether to retreat and live a lone wolf life, or fight for her safety, which would threaten everyone's survival.

The pairing of Ramsay with Phoenix makes for an electrifying experience. Both artists don't turn a blind eye to the heinous and horrific parts of the human psyche. They full-tilt bulldoze towards it. Phoenix delivers another stunning performance in a role that requires him to push to the fringes of human behavior. He more than delivers in the moments of mental anguish, like when Joe stows away in the closet of his childhood home and wraps a plastic bag over his head to relive moments of childhood trauma to queasy effect.

The theme of control is something that Ramsay has become acclaimed for mastering in her movies. She pushes audiences past the realizes that the circle of abuse he endured as a child continues despite all of his efforts and is forced to question: Did he really save her? Was he ever really there?

You Were Never Really Here is a crackling action thriller with stunning cinematography that shows artistic flourish. Ramsay and Phoenix craft a morality drama that shows how the best of efforts in a broken world can still come up fruitless. Ramsay wades into these waters to capture this dark, depraved part of the very real human psyche in an artfully electrifying fashion and the result is a trip that cinephiles will love to take.

85 minutes. You Were Never Really Here is rated R for strong violence, disturbing and grisly images, language, and brief nudity. Now available on digital (Amazon) and on Blu-ray & DVD July 17.

The Outsider by Stephen King

By Roz Templin, Library Assistant,
El Segundo Public Library

I grew up reading Stephen King novels and then seeing the movie adaptations that followed. But somewhere in the '90s, the thrill was gone. I felt that Stephen seemed to rely more on the quirky Maine dialogue of his characters than plot and story. I wandered away and found other authors.

But then I read a synopsis of The Outsider and I felt a little spark of interest: A small-town Oklahoma sports coach, beloved by children and adults alike, is suspected of a heinous crime against a young boy. Hmm, this doesn't sound like the usual Stephen King novel. A mystery, possibly a crime novel? I was attracted to the book on CD packaging, even though there looked to be many more than 10 CDs in the case.

I was sucked in almost immediately, mostly by the characterizations voiced by reader/actor Will Patton. Mr. Patton makes distinctive vocal inflections for each participant in the story and it was easy for me to picture them in my mind's eye. I couldn't wait to get in the car (I only listen to books on audio when I commute) to pick up where I last left off. Mr. Patton, of course, couldn't do it all himself --- there is solid writing here and the supernatural overtones seem secondary rather than King's books of "the old days."

Little League coach Terry Maitland -- family man, English teacher and pretty much a pillar of the community of Flint City, Oklahoma, is arrested during a championship series game. Practically the whole town witnesses this event and some of them can hear the officer shouting the charges as they lead the coach away in very visible handcuffs.

Detective Ralph Anderson thinks he has a solid case against Maitland. There is evidence and there are eyewitnesses. But it seems that Terry has a solid alibi (including evidence and eyewitnesses) for the time 11-year-old Frank Peterson was being murdered. This is just the set-up for "normal" slowly spiraling down into unexplainable. Ralph doggedly pursues clues that seem to upend his belief systems and he collaborates with others to get to the bottom of the situation.

The characters jump to life and I enjoyed getting to know them. Maitland's defense attorney and his investigator soon join in the chase of a monster, and there is a villainous co-worker of Ralph's lurking around...but it is Holly Gibney, a character from King's previous Bill Hodges trilogy, that stands out. Reader Patton gives a strange cadence to her voice that warns you that Holly is not the usual skip/trace, missing persons PI. She has numerous tics and it's hard for her to interact with people. But she has knowledge of strange occurrences and of something that's referred to as The Outsider.

The suspense washed over me as I gripped the steering wheel, listening to the last CD. I don't remember ever doing that before.

Whalen emphasized that the objective in offering the much healthier bonus to laterals is not to steal them away from other departments. He pointed to cases when officers after five or 10 years with a given department will often think about the dynamics of the job and if they envision spending the the rest of their career in the same place. For the chief himself, the answer was no (he moved from Garden Grove to Irvine PD a decade after his initial hire). "We certainly don't want someone who doesn't belong here," Whalen said. "With a lateral police officer, it's a lot about fit... For the right person, once we get their attention, this is a fantastic place to work." Whalen added that the bonus will provide the department with the tools to get its message out to lateral officers and he hopes that the process will be "much like a bidding war on a house" and lead to "more applicants than we want to hire."

In addition to laterals, the department will also offer a $10,000 bonus to police academy graduates and pre-service officers (those without the aforementioned certificate). These individuals might have been hired elsewhere, but didn't get through training. "We have some successful officers [in El Segundo] that didn't make it in other departments," Whalen said. And finally, entry level applicants will receive an incentive of $5,000 once they graduate from a police academy.

Other financial perks include moving expense reimbursement from those relocating from areas outside of Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside and San Bernardino counties (up to $5,000) and police cadet tuition reimbursement of up to $1,750 per year effective at completion of the two-year hire anniversary date while still employed with the City.

As part of the Council approval, Mayor Drew Boyles asked for eventual clarification on how many officers of each type the department hopes to hire by a certain date. Monies for the incentives and marketing firm will not come from new general fund allocations, but rather from existing salary savings due to the shortfall. The amounts will also not impact pensions. The program will additionally have a sunset clause, ending by whichever comes first—when the funds run out or Sept. 30, 2020. Boyles also suggested that expert input from the marketing firm (an RFP will go out to solicit the service) can also help Human Resources staff identify best practices when hiring for other departments.

Whalen explained that specific short-term hiring target totals may be challenging, particularly with entry level positions that take at least 18 months from the time the candidates walk through the door until when they can actually be on the street. "There are a lot of ways they can't make it," he warned.

On the other hand, the procedure to bring in laterals goes much faster and those officers can be up and running in just few months after testing and background checks. Still, Whalen stressed the need to be cautious with laterals and not "tip the scales with too many." He thought bringing in five to 10 of them would be a "solid" number. In looking at an overall recruitment goal over the long haul, Whalen remarked, "Success is 30 officers in three years."

Mayor Pro Tem Carol Pirsztuk asked if any associations or broader organizations engage in general outreach to attract police officers to the region itself. "Not much," Whalen replied. "This is in individual game. Everyone is in it for themselves." He described public safety agencies as in "competition with each other" in "a race" for a "shrinking candidate pool." As to why there are fewer applicants today, the chief pointed to the stronger economy (recessionary times when there are more layoffs tend lead to higher recruit numbers) as well as the increase on attacks -- both physical and otherwise -- on police officers. The end results are "a much more scrutinized profession" and "less and less qualified people." To drive home the latter point, Whalen reported that the department received 1,250 applications (entry level and pre-service) from the summer of 2016/17 and only three are still with ESPD. By bringing in the marketing firm, the chief added that he wants to put out a message that "resonates with modern-day applicants and millennials."

The other meeting agenda item was Council approval to ask the Metropolitan Transit Authority (Metro) to remove a housing study from the scope of work included in the agency's $659,000 grant offer connected to the City's general plan update for the east side of town. Staff requested in its place a mobility study to survey residents living within a mile of a Green Line station in El Segundo to gauge commuting habits, learn about attitudes towards the Green Line as a transportation option, and identify any issues that may prevent those individuals from using Metro. A second requested study area focuses on employees in the project area, how they get to work and the way they move about during a given day (such as going to lunch). The City hoped to fund the proposed new study points with monies previously earmarked for the housing analysis. Staff also made various revisions to the budget schedule, including allocating a chunk of the City's matching funds towards the environmental impact report as a good will gesture to Metro and to ensure those costs are adequately covered. Metro's response to the City was not yet available at the time of this writing. •

Gabrielle

We are looking for volunteers to help with our pet adoption fairs which are held every Saturday at the Petco located at 537 N. Pacific Coast Hwy., Redondo Beach 90277, from noon to 3: 30 p.m. If you are interested in volunteering and can commit to at least one Saturday a month, please contact us at info@msfr.org. You can also visit all of our Miniature Schnauzers & Friends rescues at the adoption fair or check out our website, www.msfr.org. If you have any questions about a particular dog's availability, you can email us at info@msfr.org. Schnauzers! Bet you can't adopt just one.

"Hi, my name is Gabrielle and I have to admit I'm a bit overwhelmed and confused. First of all I'm only 5 months old and the baby of the three, so I'm totally lacking in life experiences. My sisters, Hallie and Fern, and I heard tales about a holiday called the 4th of July and were looking forward, although somewhat apprehensively, to spending the day with our owners. The next thing we knew we were dumped at an LA County shelter the week before July 4 without any explanation. How could they just leave us there and never look back? At least we weren't there very long because these nice MSFR people rescued all three of us and they want to help us find better homes than the one we had. Like my sisters, I'm just a bit of gal -- currently just about 8 pounds, but I should be about 15-20 pounds when fully grown. Before I go to pet adoptions, I definitely need a bath and something called a grooming so that I'll be looking my best. Believing that the natural look is best, I have natural ears and a natural tail...and of course, an adorably sweet face. I sure hope I find someone whom I can trust to love me forever and never have to worry about being rejected again."

If you're interested in Gabrielle, please email info@msfr.org for more information.

"Hello. They call me Hallie and I was dumped at an LA County shelter along with my sisters, Gabrielle and Fern. One minute we were looking forward to spending a holiday, our very first 4th of July, with our owners. Then the next moment, they just left us. No explanation for why they no longer wanted us. Seriously, what could a 5-month-old, 8-pound baby girl possibly do that was bad enough for them to stop loving me? I know the middle child is the one with issues, but I'm not old enough to even know what an issue is! I've been told that I'm a real cutie pie -- or that I will be once I get something called a makeover. I have a natural, plumy tail, natural ears and the most expressive eyes that I know will win you over. My sister, Fern, keeps trying to assure me and Gabrielle that everything is going to be better than ever once we find our forever homes. I sure hope mine comes with a loving family and a dog to keep me company since I've never been without my sisters. Even though I'm too young to know much about life, I definitely know that I don't ever want to feel unloved and just disposed of again."

Fern

If you're interested in Hallie, please email info@msfr.org for more information.

"Hi there, I'm Fern. By now I'm certain you've, met my sisters Gabrielle and Hallie. I'm the oldest of the trio who were discarded by our owners and given to an LA County shelter the week before the 4th of July holiday. I've been trying to keep everyone's spirits up by telling my sisters that everything is going to be okay, but I'm not certain I'm very convincing. When at only 5 months old and my first life lesson is this huge rejection, it makes me a bit cautious. I am extremely grateful to the folks at MSFR for rescuing all of us and helping me find a family that will love me and appreciate everything I can bring to their family. Since I'm still a pup,

Hallie

I only weigh 8 pounds...but when I'm fully grown, I'll weigh more like 15-20 pounds. I will be the perfect size to share your lap or accompany you on our adventures. I obviously get along with other dogs since I've always had my sisters to keep me company. So if you already have a dog, I'd love to be its playmate. Everyone keeps telling me that I'm going to be stunning once I have my makeover and my coat is all clean and shiny. I have a natural tail, which I call my 'happy meter,' that shows my enthusiasm when I get excited. I also have natural ears, soulful eyes and a personality that will melt your heart."

If you're interested in Fern, please email info@msfr.org for more information. •
