City Council Looks at Short-Term Rental Issues, Possible Permitting

By Brian Simon

Short-term residential rentals (i.e. Airbnb, HomeAway and VRBO) and how to potentially regulate them spurred lengthy discussion at Tuesday night's El Segundo City Council meeting. Over the last year, City of El Segundo staff sought input from the Southern California Council of Governments (SBCOG), other cities, the Chamber of Commerce and the general public (via a survey) on the matter. On Tuesday, City Principal Planner Eduardo Schonborn presented options to the Council for dealing with short-term rentals including banning them altogether, keeping things as they are today, or allowing them through a permitting process.

Several South Bay cities have already instituted bans on short-term rentals with various penalties imposed on violators. However, Schonborn noted that enforcement doesn't tend to work well. He pointed out that one city reported that it had reduced the number of short-term rentals from the hundreds to just three—and yet a recent website search still revealed 87 listings. A further disadvantage to banning short-term rentals is the lost revenue opportunity for both business license and transit occupancy tax (TOT) collection, Schonborn explained. He added that doing nothing also creates unfair competition with the local hotel industry that already pays those taxes. Under a permitting system (which the Planning Commission recently recommended), applicants would undergo a screening process to verify ownership, ensure they have no outstanding debt to the City and show their properties are safe (e.g. have working smoke and carbon monoxide detectors and fire extinguishers). Property owners would also sign an affidavit for operational conditions such as the number of guests on the premises and onsite parking availability. Qualifying units would include houses, accessory dwelling units, condominiums and apartments (but only one in a building so as not to create a hotel-like situation).

Revenue Manager Juliana Demers provided an overview of potential City yields from the program. Applicants would pay a one-time registration fee of $250 (and $150 in subsequent years), a business license tax of $103 and then the City's 12 percent TOT. Based on an estimate of 150 days of the year at $150 per night, a typical short-term rental garners about $22,000 annually. Owners would pay a total of $3,053 in year one ($2,953 thereafter), of which $2,700 is the TOT. With roughly 100 short-term rentals in town, the City could expect to earn in the vicinity of $300,000 in additional yearly tax revenues, according to Demers.

The prospect of allowing short-term rentals did not sit well with several residents who addressed the Council during the public hearing on the topic. Neighbors of a particular property at 416 Virginia Street complained about continued problems at that location from short-term renters and worried that permitting the entire process would exacerbate issues across town. Gary Schumnk spoke of "loud parties" and "drunken fights" at the Virginia site, stating that it is like "living next door to a fraternity house." Mona Eisman warned that the financial appeal of short-term rentals is "tremendous" and that if El Segundo is the only beach community

Affordable Housing Authority Stays Under City Council Control

By Rob McCarthy

The nation's high court sees no legal problem with California cities and counties requiring builders to make some houses and apartments in new developments affordable to people who've been priced out of the market. The justices rejected a Southern California developer's argument that affordablehousing quotas are unconstitutional.

In a case pitting California cities and counties against developers, justices last month refused to take up a West Hollywood developer's challenge to inclusionary zoning. This type of zoning gives city councils and boards of supervisors the authority to adopt ordinances and set policies that force new developments to include some affordable homes for sale and apartments for rent. Inclusionary zoning is considered by urban planners and government agencies an effective tool for adding to the limited availability of affordable housing units. "People shouldn't have to the leave the state in order to find affordable housing or achieve the American dream of home ownership," said State Senator Steven Bradford (D-Gardena.)

The zoning power gives local officials the dual powers to approve new developments while extending some rent relief to a small number of residents and families with low or moderate incomes. The U.S. See Affordable Housing, page 13

Richmond Street Elementary School held its first Literacy O'Lantern Contest in which families had the chance to create a book character on a pumpkin or gourd. Forty-seven students and four staff members turned in fabulously creative lanterns, from Harry Potter, Pinkalicious, Captain Underpants, Where the Wild Things Are, Pete the Cat, and a slew of favorite characters. Mrs. Haun, Richmond's Reading Specialist, was the event coordinator.

At the October 30 staff meeting, teachers voted on their favorite three choices. Top votes resulted in two kindergarten winners: Zoe Haberman with her "The Day the Crayons Came Home" and Kaitlyn Strom with "Don't Let the Pigeon Drive the Bus." The winners proudly marched as the "Parade Marshals," leading the school's annual Halloween parade.

When asked about the experience, Zoe shared, "I looked in a book and I decided I wanted that book, so my mom bought the crayons. I drawed the faces and my mom hot-glued them on. My favorite crayon was Glow in the Dark Crayon." Kaitlyn shared, "I really like that book. It's silly. I really like that particular character. It's very funny and thought it would be a good hit!" She added that her dad painted the blue parts and she painted all the white and black parts and the collar made out of a cup.

The top staff member pick was second grade teacher Mrs. Gilbert with her "BFG" creation. For more pictures, visit Photo Albums on Richmond Street School's website: http:// www.richmondstreet.org/apps/album/index.jsp ?dir=27348&backLink=&backTitle= to allow them, then "we'll have hundreds" of them. "Do we want de facto hotels in our residential neighborhoods?" she asked. Eisman thought it was key to limit the number of days on short-term rentals, but also indicated that "home-sharing is different" and an acceptable situation when the property is owner-occupied.

Mayor Suzanne Fuentes stated that she doesn't want El Segundo to be the only city in the South Bay that allows short-term rentals. Councilmember Mike Dugan said zoning is the issue. "Did I buy a house in an R-1 neighborhood to be next to a short-term rental? Absolutely not," he said. "Transients do not belong in an R-1 neighborhood."

Mayor Pro Tem Drew Boyles emphasized that the City has only received one complaint about short-term rentals-the Virginia house in question. He said that most people he spoke with during his Council campaign were in favor of short-term rentals and wanted "the flexibility of Airbnb for their properties."

Councilmember Carol Pirsztuk was open to the permitting concept and wanted to look into the idea of limiting the rentals to owner-occupied properties. She suggested canvassing neighborhoods to see if the rentals are in one room or taking up the entire house. Councilmember Don Brann thought the City should study the issue more, but opined that it has "the potential to wreck the quality of life" in town. With no clear consensus as yet, staff will come back in January with an update after more input from the SBCOG, additional research, and outreach with local short-term rental property owners.

Also on Tuesday, the Council unanimously agreed to extend the moratorium on permit issuance for marijuana-related land uses in town another year (to November 14, 2018) to allow time to monitor data and consult with other cities and states. The City already has a permanent ban in place that prohibits business licenses for commercial marijuana sales as well as outdoor cultivation in town and delivery within the community. However, the provisions of Prop 64 that passed last November allow limited possession inside the home (up to six plants). The State of California was set to begin issuing licenses for retail marijuana establishments in January, but City Attorney Mark Hensley reported that the process may be delayed. He added that many other factors are still up in the air, such as how to enforce those driving under the influence since there isn't a standardized test as there is for blood alcohol level. Also, there is talk of creating a special banking system for retail marijuana since it is still illegal on the federal level and is currently a cash business.

obligations. Among other advantages, the plan offers increased risk diversification of assets, allows more City oversight and control of fund management selection, and has lower management and administrative expenses compared to CalPERS. Speaking of CalPERS, Mayor Pro Tem Boyles and Finance Director Joseph Lillio will attend a workshop and board meeting for the agency in Sacramento next week to discuss pension issues and the impacts on cities including El Segundo.

During reports, Councilmember Brann looked to build up participation in the "struggling" Arts and Culture Advisory Committee, which is down to four members despite being slotted for 11. In hopes of reducing red tape and to expedite appointees, Brann suggested that committee members themselves interview and vote for candidates. The Council would then make the official appointments without conducting additional interviews-unless it specifically decides to do so. Brann's colleagues were not in favor of the idea, feeling they wish to remain in the interview loop. Meanwhile the Council will interview (and potentially appoint) two new applicants on November 21, with four more candidates on the horizon to bring membership up to 10. Committee Chair Sally Martin said she has no problem with the Council conducting the interviews, but wants it to be a priority to quickly get membership back up to the needed number to tackle the many projects on the docket. Earlier during public communications, resident Jim Boulgarides thought it was a "terrifically bad idea" to allow committee members to conduct the interviews. He felt it could result in "little fiefdoms" in the community with no accountability. During presentations, Police Chief Bill Whelan introduced two recent graduates from the LA Sheriff's Academy. Matthew Rice and Rodolfo "Rudy" Reynosa will finish their training in five to six months and become El Segundo Police officers. The City also proclaimed November 20 through December 20 as the period for this year's Spark of Love toy drive. A tradition since the early '90s, the program provides a way for residents and businesses to donate toys and non-perishable foods to the Fire Station 1 (314 Main Street) to help those less fortunate during the holidays. And finally on another holiday-related note, Scot Nicol addressed the Council representing residents of 1100 block of Acacia to report impacts from the annual Candy Cane Lane that occurs on the 1200 block of the same street. Nicol spoke of people being hit by cars as well as property damage. Possible solutions include a one-way traffic option and putting up temporary street blockades. The item will return to the Council in the near future. •

World Series Loss Means More Heartache for Dodgers and Fans

By Adam Serrao

The World Series championship that has eluded the Los Angeles Dodgers for so long will have to wait at least another year to find itself a home in Southern California. A series filled with amazing victories, heartbreaking losses, incredible performances and gigantic meltdowns most likely could have gone back and forth for another seven games. Eventually, however, it ended in favor of the Houston Astros, as the American League team showed up on the road in the game that mattered most. The Dodgers will have a very long offseason to look back at what went wrong in the World Series. They'll also have an even longer 162-game regular season schedule to play in order to make another run at the team's first championship victory in what will now be 30 years of heartache.

Heartache probably can't begin to describe the feeling of Dodger fans everywhere as they watched their team quickly take a 5-0 deficit in the only Game 7 of the World Series that Los Angeles has ever been a part of in the team's local history. In the biggest moment of his career, on one of the grandest stages in the entire sports world, Dodgers pitcher Yu Darvish failed. The conclusion to a series that may have been among the most dramatic ever played ended in the most anticlimactic fashion possible as Los Angeles was out of the game and championship contention from what seemed to be the opening pitch.

Word came out days later that Darvish was tipping his pitches, meaning that batters like George Springer, Jose Altuve and Carlos Correa knew what was coming before the ball even reached home plate. It certainly looked that way. Much of the blame there can easily be placed on Darvish--a pitcher the Dodgers acquired for exactly this situation. How, though, as coaches, do you leave a pitcher who clearly doesn't have it out on the mound in the most important game of the year to give up five runs==especially after his last outing against the same Astros team in Game 3 in which he looked just as bad?

As far as blame goes, it can certainly be placed on Dave Roberts and the rest of the coaching staff for trusting too much in analytics and not in their own eyes. Many different questionable moves throughout the entirety of the World Series simply culminated in leaving Darvish out on the mound for far too long. That, combined with the way that the Dodgers' best players sulked and felt sorry for themselves from the second inning on, gave the team zero chance at pulling off a comefrom-behind victory in a winner-take-all game in front of their home crowd. massive momentum switch for Houston. Not only was the Los Angeles home crowd taken out of the game from that point forward, but Bellinger also proceeded to hurt the team at the plate. He struck out three times on the night and went 0-4, acting as the main, major hole in the lineup that led to almost zero offensive production for a team that still managed to obtain more hits than its counterparts in the final box score.

The Dodgers were 98-0 this season when having the lead after eight innings of play. Yet, in Game 2, Roberts left Jansen in for his second career six-out save attempt and the Dodgers wound up losing the game. The Dodgers were 100-1 in starts by Clayton Kershaw when he was given at least a four-run cushion. Kershaw gave up both a four-run lead and a three-run lead in Game 5 before being pulled in a loss that eventually saw the Dodgers go down 3-2 in the best of seven series. Theoretically, the Dodgers should have won five of the first six games played against the Astros, were it not for bad coaching decisions and All-Star players buckling under playoff pressure.

Putting the blame game aside, the Astros were simply the better team. They made more plays when it counted and fewer mistakes at key moments in the series. For the Dodgers, they are now forced to once again focus on next year. How will the team get better so that it can finally take the next step forward and become champions instead of simply making it to the playoffs or the Fall Classic? Darvish, Logan Forsythe, Brandon Morrow and Chase Utley are all free agents, among others. Clayton Kershaw will be another year older, coming off of another year in which he was injured. Corey Seager may need surgery to repair his ailing elbow. Drama involving Adrian Gonzalez hovers around the team. All of those questionable situations, and more, surround a 104-win team that finished with the best record in baseball yet will be looking to improve upon a year that once again somehow ended in letdown.

The Dodger season went on for as long as it possibly could have this year, providing the team's fans with a maximum amount of entertainment value. The year may have ended with a loss and in disappointment, but the memories of joy, elation, excitement and accomplishment will remain. The only thing to do now is to focus attention toward next season. The Dodgers have been through three decades of baseball that have all ultimately ended in disappointment. Los Angeles and the team's fans will once again look forward to next year in order to finally rid the franchise of all of its surrounding regret.

Playoff Run Ends for Some Teams, Football Starts Postseason

By Gregg McMullin

The fall sports teams have had incredible seasons. Each sport has done well enough to advance to the CIF Southern Section playoffs. The girls' volleyball team's playoff run reached the CIF Southern Section Division 4 quarterfinals and the boys' water polo team's season ended in the second round of the playoffs. The boys' and girls' cross country teams each won Ocean League titles and qualified for the CIF-SS prelims. The football team's season continues in the first round of the CIF-SS Section Division 7 playoffs tonight at El Modena High.

Kurke and Pearson Lead Volleyball Team

Maddie Kurke and Alyssa Pearson led the Lady Eagles to a 19-12 season record and a CIF- Southern Section Division 4 appearance. It marked the third consecutive season El Segundo has advanced to the round of eight.

In the first round against Downey, the San Gabriel Valley League champions, the Lady four games but managed to prevail in the match 25-21, 25-21, 14-25, 25-23. Each game was exciting--and playing in front of a full gym helped the adrenalin for each team. In each game, the Lady Eagles played catchup.

In the first game, a block by Pearson evened the score at 16-16. Lexi Tecun's brilliant play and digs kept rallies alive and El Segundo forged ahead 23-20 before winning the first game. In the second game, Hebert's block tied the game at 9-9 to help spark her team. An ace by Kurke gave the Lady Eagles a 19-14 lead and helped them hold on for the win. In the third game, El Segundo fell behind 10-3 and never recovered.

With the momentum in Moorpark's favor, the Lady Eagles played an inspired game four. Though Moorpark seemed to control the scoring with some vicious hits for points, El Segundo played with more intensity. Kurke's kill gave her team a 24-23 lead and then an unforced error gave her team the win and match.

Eagles controlled the match from the very start in winning 25-14, 25-20, 26-24. Alyssa Pearson had 13 blocks to control the net while Maddie Kurke had 17 kills to lead the team.

In the first game, the Lady Eagles pulled away 17-5 by scoring seven consecutive points. Kurke put the game away with a kill. In the second game, the team went on a scoring binge and led 16-4 before Downey climbed back into the game. Adri Hebert gave the Lady Eagles some relief and scored on a block for a 21-17 El Segundo lead to hold on for the win. In the third game, the Lady Eagles hung on for a thrilling 26-24 win.

Against Moorpark, El Segundo spotted the Musketeers at least a three-point lead in all The Lady Eagles' magical season came to an end against in the CIF-SS Division 4 quarterfinals when they lost to Cypress 25-14, 25-18, 25-20. The Musketeers' passing, hitting and digs overwhelmed El Segundo's attack.

Boys' Water Polo Falls in the Second Round

The Eagles won the Ocean League and entered the CIF playoffs with a 20-7 record. In the opening round, the Eagles faced Orange County powerhouse Edison of Huntington Beach. El Segundo's 14-12 win over the Chargers was played with as much emotion as any this season.

Both Kyle Crist and Owen Hale played See Eagles, page 14

Ten players left on base only began to tell the story of a team that clearly did not want it as much as the Houston Astros. Cody Bellinger--who looked as if he had been out partying too late for Halloween the night before--committed a brutal error to start the game when he inexplicably threw a fielded ground ball behind Darvish, who was covering first base, in a play that led to two runs and a

One Man's Opinion Brazile's DNC Allegations Indicate More Than Unethical Agreements

By Cristian Vasquez

Excerpts released from former Democratic National Committee interim chair Donna Brazile claim that an unethical agreement between the DNC and Hillary Clinton's 2016 presidential campaign was reached in an attempt to keep the DNC alive financially. While it is no surprise to hear that Clinton is being accused of something unethical, it is alarming that the DNC would resort to such actions, for any reason, and to the degree that Brazile claims. These actions are more than just a shakeup within the Democratic Party's establishment--and lifelong supporters of the party should be angered and need to either clean house or abandon ship.

In all fairness, it was announced in 2015 that a joint fundraising effort between the DNC and Clinton's campaign was in place. Furthermore, by 2016 the two had signed an agreement to fundraise together under the guise that the agreement was no different from the ones President Obama's campaign used in 2008 and 2012. Yet, Brazile's claims that Clinton's campaign pumped money into the DNC for control of its finances one year prior to Clinton becoming the official nominee shows a level of corruption that justifies the President's "Crooked Hillary" chant. The writing is on the wall is clear: Clinton dangled the carrot in front of the DNC for her power pursuit. The DNC took the carrot and at the end of the day, they both got what they deserved: a failed campaign. Unfortunately, the American people will pay for their mistake for the next four years, if not eight.

Based on Brazile's claims, Clinton and her campaign had the blessing of the DNC and at least a one-year advantage over every Democratic Party candidate and still failed miserably. Will people now accept how horrible of a candidate she was? Her supporters probably won't, and many will likely resort to Russian interference or dirty campaigning to justify the loss. The reality is that Clinton and the DNC personify what the Democratic establishment has evolved into: a movement without structure, without leaders and without substance. We can point to Democrats who are considered the future of the party (Newsom, Harris, Castro or Kennedy III), but what kind of future can registered Democrats expect when the DNC leases its powers to one candidate to pay off massive debts? One of two things will happen: the young Democrats climbing the ranks will either cooperate with the DNC playbook, hence becoming part of the problem...or, they will simply never shake off the label of potential leaders and get stonewalled by their party.

Politics is a dirty game and learning about these accusations comes as no surprise, but Democrats need to be more than outraged--if not by the lack of ethics behind this agreement, then at least by the lack of coherent leadership from the party. At the end of the day, it was Clinton and the DNC that lost an election to a candidate who had never held public office, despite all the advantages granted to Clinton via an unethical agreement. •

Another Man's Opinion House of Cards Continues to Crumble in Libcentric Hollyweird

By Duane Plank

Shocked to see a push-back last week against the latest Plank diatribe in the letters section. Egads!

Did you fill up your gas tank in the last week? If so, say thank you to the extra money that you forked over to the soon-tobe termed out Cali Governor Jerry Brown, whom I pretty much like, by the way. The guise is that they will take the billions that they are lifting from our wallets and fix the crappy roads and remedy other transportation issues that have plagued the great state of California for more than a few years. Sure.

Not that the extorted money will be used to help fund the Brown-backed boondoggle of a bullet train, right? A bullet train that is headed god knows where and will cost tens of billions. Or maybe the Dems and the next Governor, who undoubtedly will be a Dem, will funnel the extra gas tax and car registration fees that were rammed through by the Dems who run the sanctuary state of California into trying to lessen the incredible pension funding problem that has plagued our state as politicians have continued to kowtow to unions in their effort to win election after election.

And kowtowing to the unions has worked, if working is jamming the political positions in this state with left-leaning pols. Who were/ are trying to enforce some kind of insanity that was termed the "Road Diet." Choking off the commute in our neighborhoods as we steam to and fro from work every day. Hoping that we will bike to work, walk to work, or take the very inconvenient public transportation options to work, or to our other destinations of commerce or recreation.

That is a great thought--biking to work. Save the environment, save this, save that. Climate change and all. Do you think the corpulent Al Gore, alleged mastermind of the global warming diatribe, or the sweaty, somewhat chubby actor Leo De Caprio-another alleged protect the environment wacko--have ever biked to work? Or taken public transportation?

For me, that would mean biking to the See's Candies distribution center on Alameda Street in Carson. Yeah, that would be a great idea. At 5:30 in the morning, I will jump on my crummy bike, ride it 20 miles to Carson and feel good because I have saved the planet. I am sure that my co-workers would love to sit next to a guy who just sweated his way through a 20-mile bike ride.

No showers at See's Candies, at least that I am privy to, so I can arrive drenched in sweat...if I don't get killed on the way, riding my tricycle in the dark. And then--after putting in an incredibly tough day of working with our fundraising and business partners, cajoling them and utilizing my incredible sales talents--hop back on my crummy bike and navigate my way back to the safety and sanctity of El Segundo.

Yeah, that seems like a great option. I am starting to warm up to the option of being taxed even more and saving this planet.

Thor: Ragnarok Brings Fresh Perspective to Marvel Universe

By H. Nelson Tracey for www.cinemacy.com

Covering the Marvel Cinematic Universe from a critical perspective is always interesting: the behemoth franchise never missteps or whiffs, but often fails to leave us with an individual film to be remembered. The most inarguably flat film of the entire franchise may be Thor: The Dark World. While we all have our favorites (or least favorites), this cold, heartless sequel is never brought up in conversation since its release. With the first outing of Thor, a compelling character arc was put in place: our hero went from being a brash, arrogant and clueless character to a more grounded hero by the end of the film. It's a great journey, but it only lasts for one film--so by the second Thor movie, there was no place for him to go forward and the writers didn't even bother to attempt it. This, more than any other reason, is what made the second film so stale. So where to go from there? If there is ever proof that anything can be great under the guidance of the right person, it is Thor: Ragnarok. Entrusted in the hands of indie favorite Taika Waititi--whose last two films, Hunt for the Wilderpeople and What We Do in the Shadows, are some of the best comedies of the decade--it was anyone's guess what a massive scale blockbuster would look like under his influence. To our delight, the film more closely resembles the work of Waititi than a conventional Marvel film, and we are all able to benefit from it.

From the very get-go when we see Thor in action on some brooding, otherworldly setting, there is a juxtaposition from the grandiose visuals of the Thor universe met with the oddball Waititi humor that never fails to deliver. For the first time in a while, it feels like a director has taken command of the reins of a Marvel movie. Mind you, unlike most sequels to bad movies where they attempt to revise history or scrap previous entries, this film embraces all the story points from the last film but chooses to have a lot of fun with them.

The plot on its own could be a more straightforward tale: An evil villain (Cate Blanchett)

who has a history at Asgard, enters into the fray with the intention of ruling over the entire galaxy. Thor (Chris Hemsworth), meanwhile, is thrown off guard again and lands on a junk-pile planet where, in order to escape, he must serve as a gladiator. Borrowing cues from throughout the decade, I'm struck with how well employed this '80s homage is- by setting it on a specific planet, it gives the entire universe a more layered feeling where certain places have different atmospheres than others. The balance between the two planets, the regal Asgard and the synthesized '80sinspired second planet, is a great contrast and the variety makes the whole adventure a delightful romp. Of the Marvel movies, the only one I can actively recall re-watching is the original Avengers. After viewing this film, I can safely say I'd be thrilled to relish in Thor: Ragnarok again. With its humor, vision and sincerity, the bar has been raised for what Marvel can accomplish, and I hope its look continues to invite more brilliant directors to jump into the fray. Thor: Ragnarok is rated PG-13 for intense sequences of sci-fi violence and action, and brief suggestive material. 130 minutes. Now playing in theaters everywhere. •

Affordable Housing

Supreme Court gave a thumbs up to state law governing affordable housing requirements on new homes and apartments.

No one expects the court rulings--or newly signed California laws--to solve the region's housing crisis, which is growing as the median price of a home countywide hovers above a half-million dollars, according to a June real estate survey. CoreLogic said the median price in May was $560,500 across Los Angeles County.

"Affordable housing is being addressed to some extent, but we have a huge supply constraint in Los Angeles that's driven by multiple factors," said Paul Habibi, a lecturer in finance at UCLA. "But the long and short of it is we have more demand than we have housing supply. It's driven up the cost of housing and it's created a pretty dramatic affordability crunch."

No more than 30 percent of a household or individual's monthly income should go for housing, according to Habibi. Yet, almost one-third of renters in the state spend half of their take-home pay on rent, according to findings from California Department of Housing and Community Development.

Local households would need to receive a 50 percent raise to $96,000 per year to reach the 30 percent requirement for a median-priced home, Habibi said. A 14 percent raise would cover a median-priced apartment.

South Bay's median home prices sold in August ranged between $470,000 in Carson to $2.23 million in Manhattan Beach, according to a pricing listed at Torrance Real Estate.com. The most affordable communities continue to be Gardena, Hawthorne, Harbor City, Lawndale, Playa del Rey and San Pedro--with homes priced under $500,000, based on the August sales report.

Fully aware of the looming housing crisis facing the state's workforce, Governor Jerry Brown and the Legislature passed into law this year 15 bills, including one that restored the authority of South Bay cities and the county to demand that developers do their part. State and L.A. leaders also say that homelessness must be addressed, and they link the high homeless population to a lack of affordable apartments for displaced individuals and families.

One of the new laws, authored by Assemblyman Richard Bloom, D-Santa Monica, allows cities and counties to require that 15 percent of units in market-rate housing be set aside as affordable to low- or moderateincome people.

In in an op-ed piece published on the website BisNow.com, Habibi suggests that South Bay city leaders and the L.A. Board of Supervisors green-light more types of workforce-specific affordable housing. Rents and home prices are linked to the limited supply of new construction, the UCLA lecturer said.

The state needs 180,000 additional pricereduced housing units each year, according to the Housing and Community Development Department. The need far outpaces the 80,000 new units per year that local governments have approved over the past decade, according to Habibi.

Los Angeles County needs nearly 500,000 more units that are affordable to lowerincome households. However, current new construction meets just three percent of that need, according to the California Housing Partnership Corp.

Governor Brown on September 29 signed into law 15 legislative bills to help increase the supply and affordability of housing statewide. The measures provide funding for affordable housing, reduce regulations, boost construction and strengthen existing housing laws, according to the Governor's office. Several are targeted at slow-moving cities that tie up affordable housing projects in red tape and refuse to approve the badly needed projects.

SB 166 ensures that cities maintain an ongoing supply of housing construction sites for residents of various income levels. SB 167 and AB 678 raise the standard of proof required for a local government to justify a denial of low- and moderate-income housing development projects.

AB 72 strengthens the state's ability to enforce laws that require local governments to achieve housing goals. SB 540 streamlines the environmental review process for certain local affordable housing projects. AB 73 gives local governments incentives to create housing on infill sites near public transportation.

AB 879 authorizes a study of local fees charged to new residential developments that will also include a proposal to substantially reduce such fees.

also signed by the Governor, which empowers local city councils and L.A. County supervisors to deny new homes and apartment projects if the developer refuses to keep a portion of the new units affordable for lowto moderate-income residents of South Bay cities and unincorporated areas. • brilliantly to lead the way. Hale led all scorers with six goals, while Crist had five goals. Hale started strong, putting away the team's first goal on an outside shot with an incredible spin lob that is similar to a screwball in baseball. The entire team battled hard and played solidly over four quarters. Mason Jaeger added two goals, while Kalan Smith had one goal in the second half. Caden Kastigar was badgered throughout and had seven saves in goal.

The Eagles' momentum in the first round started to carry over in the second round against top-seeded Ayala High School. With confidence on their side, the Eagles jumped out to an early 2-1 lead by the end of the first quarter behind goals from Crist and Hale. The second quarter went back and forth and it was tied 5-5 heading into the second half. In the third quarter the teams battled, but the Eagles fell behind 9-7. Perhaps the turning point came when El Segundo had an advantage power play, but failed to score. The Eagles turned the ball over and Ayala went on to score. In the final period the teams traded goals, but the Eagles couldn't capitalize on a couple key opportunities and ultimately lost 11-9.

Coach Riley Brady was philosophical afterwards. "It was a great run, but I know by the emotion after the game that none of the players or coaches were ready for the season to end," he said. "We have a young squad that will certainly develop over the next couple years."

The Eagles have just two seniors who have been with the varsity for four years. Nolan Young and Kyle Crist will have bright futures ahead of them, according to Coach Brady. "Nolan Young has never gotten a grade lower than an A in his entire academic career and will certainly represent our program and school well as he moves on," Brady said. "Kyle just placed sixth out of 250 applicants on the LA County Fire Department Ocean Lifeguard swim test."

Boys' and Girls' Cross Country Teams Win Ocean League Titles Both boys' and girls' cross country squads swept to Ocean League titles at the challenging Kenneth Hahn State Park's course. Noah

The Eagles gained 258 yards on the ground thanks to #52 Jess Caravello, #55 Gunnar Rogers and #67 Justin Delgado.

Arman Sayson, who gained 118 yards against Santa Monica, picks up 29 yards on this play.

Fenton led the Eagles and finished a close second in 16:43. Sophomores Ryan Hoerner and Elliott Bijlsma finished fourth and sixth respectively. Garrett Rifkin and Arend Verfallie finished in the top 10, while Calvin Lang and Benjamin Kooper ran well and should be ready for the CIF Prelims set for Saturday at the Riverside City Cross Country Course.

The girls' team had all seven members finish in the top 13 runners to win the Ocean League title. Nicole Fulcomer led the Lady Eagles by placing third (19:50), while Sophia Zago was fourth (19:51), James Matlosz fifth (20:17), Gabby Lee sixth (20:30), Alyana Verfallie eighth (20:46), Grace Hoffman 11th and Kate Johnson 13th. The Lady Eagles will compete at the CIF prelims on Saturday at the Riverside City Cross Country Course.

Romero Leads Eagles Over Santa Monica and Into Playoffs

The Eagles finished the regular season 8-2 with their 40-6 win over Santa Monica. Matt Romero led the Eagles' offense by scoring three rushing touchdowns. He opened the scoring in the first quarter with a keeper from one yard out. He scored on a five-yard run and one-yard plunge that was set up when Ben Rosas recovered a fumble late in the second quarter.

Sophomore sensation Arman Sayson gained a game-high 118 yards rushing with a fouryard TD run. Arman's brother Dar Sayson followed the line play of Jess Caravello, Gunnar Rogers and Justin Delgado to score on a three-yard TD run. Danny McEntee scored his eighth rushing touchdown of the season on a seven-yard run with 36 seconds remaining in the first half.

The defense was stellar for the first three quarters and most of the fourth quarter. Santa Monica gained just 98 total yards of offense. The Vikings picked up 34 yards in their final possession of the game to get into the end zone.

The Eagles face second-seeded El Modena tonight in the opening round of the CIF Southern Section Division 7 playoffs. Tonight's rare Thursday night game starts at 7 p.m. El Modena High School is located at 3920 Spring Street, Orange. •

Get the Feel of a Remodel for Less

(BPT) - Dreaming of a renovation but lacking the time and resources for a full upgrade? You might be able to refresh your space by focusing your efforts on individual elements that have the most impact.

This growing interior design trend uses a thoughtful approach to renovation by analyzing what should be replaced to achieve the desired aesthetic. At the heart of this movement is the idea that a strong, singular update can change a room dramatically.

That means you can revamp your favorite rooms without investing in a complete remodel. For example, a new chandelier in the entryway might be the statement piece you need to welcome guests in style. Or, rather than ripping out the dining room, explore how a new dining set with table and chairs can change the entire personality of the space.

When investing in singular pieces to enhance a room, custom features reign supreme. The Laura Kirar KAL-LISTA collection from Kohler is a great example. Kirar, an internationally renowned designer, marries the beauty of natural elements with the pureness of line and symmetry in the collection's bath vanity, mirror and sconces.

Have you grown weary of your tired bathroom design? Mixing and matching various materials lets you make a personal statement in any room. With the KALLISTA Paletta line you can customize the look by choosing from five different finish combinations. For example, nickel and antique silver blend beautifully together by evoking a stylish design element of warm and cool tones that creates personality and character within the room.

Not only do the mixed finishes add visual impact, but when you pair Paletta brassware with a marble top console table, you create a stunning effect that immediately captures attention no matter how big or small the space. This singular update can revamp a dated master bath or enhance a bland powder room - no massive remodel necessary.

Light is another element that can redefine a space, yet it's often overlooked when approaching a room refresh. Remember to look at lighting from different perspectives. Analyze natural lighting against installed ambient, task and accent lighting. Note fixtures and consider the impact of updating sconces and shades that are no longer en vogue. It might be just what's needed in the various spaces throughout your home.

When you take a step back and take stock of your surroundings, do so with a fresh set of eyes and see the possibilities. A complete update may not be necessary. Do your research, focus on singular elements with the most impact, and invest in luxurious features that stand the test of time. With this approach, you can change any room's setting beautifully without committing to an entire renovation. \bullet
