South Bay Not Making Much Headway on Electric Vehicle Goal

By Rob McCarthy

South Bay drivers and fleet owners are supposed to have 33,000 electric vehicles on the road in six years. California figures that's a fair expectation since the South Bay represents slightly more than 2 percent of the state's registered drivers. The current number of the alternative-fuel vehicles -- known as EVs -- is less than 4,000 across the South Bay.

Sacramento is counting on individual motorists, businesses and local governments to make the switch from gas-powered cars, trucks and buses to electric-powered vehicles before 2025. That's the target date for having 1.5 million EVs on the road in California. The race to reduce carbon emissions and coax more buyers into battery-operated vehicles began in earnest in 2006 and continued with former Gov. Jerry Brown issuing an executive order in January 2018 that state and local governments take the lead to increase EV use.

Currently, there are about 3,800 electric vehicles in the South Bay, according to the South Bay Cities Council of Governments. The organization keeps an updated count of EV ownership in the South Bay and lists each city's number of zero-emission vehicles. For the benefit of EV owners, the organization also shows the location of nearby charging stations.

Hawthorne has 123 electric vehicles in operation and a goal of reaching 3,274 of the zero-emission cars by the 2025 target date, according to the quasi-governmental group. Inglewood motorists own 78 EVs, and must reach 4,588 over the next 60 months. Lawndale residents account for 36 zero-emission vehicles now. Their target is 1,186.

Clearly, South Bay city leaders and state agencies will need to put the pedal to the metal to reach the state requirements for clean-running transportation. El Segundo residents have put 113 EVs into operation so far. The state is demanding 739 battery-powered cars or trucks be registered in the city. The city of Carson has one of the larger targets -- 3,217 -- and has just 106 EVs owned and operated in the city now. These numbers are just a first phase.

The number of electric vehicles in the state must be 5 million by the end of the next decade, according to Brown's directive. It's unclear what, if any penalties, cities would face for not reaching their EV goals. State agencies and officials are tasked with working with local governments and private industry to create 250,000 charging stations for the EVs. What will it take for the South Bay to reach the state's ambitious goals for individual drivers and fleet owners? Higher confidence by the driving public and continued tax and price incentives to attract first-time electric vehicle buyers who worry about running out of juice and getting stranded. Studies done on EVs have shown there is little difference between a gas engine and a battery-powered one for most commuters. The need to drive longer distances is a real concern among consumers when considering an EV purchase.

A summary of findings from the South Bay Cities Council of Governments, which began researching the EVs five years ago and makes comparisons against gas-powered vehicles, noted the average household reduces their emissions by 40 percent when a battery-powered vehicle is introduced in the family. These EVs can be swapped out for a gas-powered engine for normal distances and destinations, according to the study's findings. "Most participants used their homes or workplaces to charge their vehicles" using a 100-volt outlet, researchers reported. The EVs can keep up with the speed of traffic, too.

Battery electric vehicles are "full-speed vehicles" which have a typical range of 80 to 90 miles before they need to be recharged, said the authors of the December 2017 study.

The federal government offers a tax credit of up to $7,500 on the purchase of a new electric vehicle or hybrid, according to the U.S. Department of Energy website. The credit amount is based on the capacity of the battery used to power the vehicle. The EV tax credit can be applied to an individual or couple's federal tax return to lower the amount of taxes owed or increase the size of a refund. Used vehicles do not qualify, and the tax credit on a leased EV is given to the leasing company, according to the Energy Department.

State residents also are eligible for a $7,000 rebate from the state for purchase or lease of an all-electric or hybrid vehicle. As long as funds are available, eligible California residents can follow a simple process to apply for a CVRP rebate after purchasing or leasing a vehicle that qualifies through the program.

The California Air Resources Board also offers incentives for public fleets, with a standard CVRP rebate for all California public entities. Other high-value incentives are given to local governments and agencies in vulnerable and pollution-burdened areas. "Public agencies are eligible for up to 30 vehicle rebates annually. Some fleets may

The Clockmaker's Daughter by Kate Morton

Reviewed by Kristina Kora-Beckman, Librarian, El Segundo Public Library

Part ghost story, part mystery, Kate Morton's latest historical fiction book, The Clockmaker's Daughter, weaves multiple storylines through time while touching on music, art, war and the supernatural. At first glance, the various characters and their tales don't appear connected... but by the end of the story, they have converged in interesting and sometimes unexpected ways.

Similar to other Morton works, Clockmaker features a house, Birchwood Manor, located in a small English village. Throughout the 150-plus years, the house is the setting for joy, grief, love and even death, but, despite tragedy, endures as a symbol of refuge for characters in need.

Morton excels at crafting tragic outcomes where small decisions in series of events can have far-reaching implications. While readers wish the characters made different choices that might have resulted in happier results, they understand the complex human emotions and complicating circumstances that can lead to the imperfect human decisions. Morton's writing is beautiful, elegantly crafting rich characters that draw you into lush descriptions of their hopes, dreams, disappointments and fears.

Film Review

Us Review: A New, Essential American Nightmare

By Ryan Rojas for www.cinemacy.com

Last year's Get Out ended up being more than just one of the scariest and most wildly original movies of recent times. Jordan Peele's horror flick, about a group of African Americans who become enslaved through mind control after getting hypnotized by a family of wealthy Whites, became a pop cultural lightning rod for people to discuss the Black experience of living in America – speaking to both its earliest historical roots of enslavement through the modern anxiety of Trump-era politics.

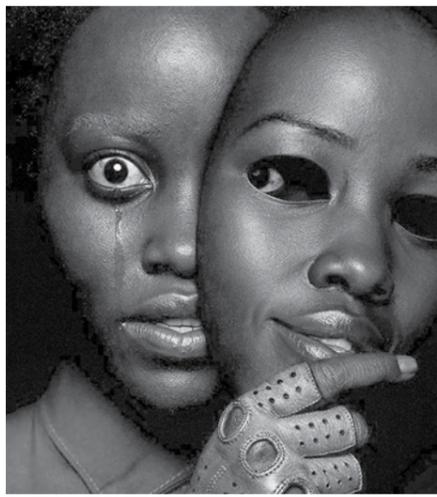

For such a stunning achievement of a debut, it's no wonder that audiences have been looking forward to whatever Peele's follow-up film would be with feverish excitement. And now, Peele is back with another enough, being each of their actual selves.

A family of four staring back at their exact opposites, they see these attackers all clad in red jumpsuits, brandishing scissors as weapons and noticeably all mute – except for Adelaide's doppelgänger, Red (also played by Nyong'o). From there, it's a story of the family trying to outlive their attackers, who aim to do away with them and take their place in this world.

Peele, a previous funnyman whose background on the two iconic sketch shows Mad TV and Key and Peele helped shape him into the brilliant premise inventor that he is, proves more amazingly here that it's his deep understanding of film history that makes him such a gifted talent (the Hitchcock comparisons have been flying his way as of late). While this review could spend even more time unpacking the visual references that are everywhere in the film and their significance (while still not touching on everything), quite simply put, Us is everything any audience could want in a movie. And one of the best parts is Peele marries his uncompromising vision with the mindset of being big-screen popcorn entertainment, giving Us the opportunity to be seen and discussed by people of all types. And this is what films – the best, paradigm-shifting films – are supposed to do. We should not only escape into something for 100 minutes and return to modern life unchanged, but come back from the experience more learned, or at the very least willing to confront real-world discomforts. So beyond being one of the most unsettling films of this or any other recent year, Us achieves an importance that will be recognized, re-watched and discussed for years to come.

suspense thriller – Us – which is equally ambitious in its masterfully layered allegory (this review is spoiler-free).

It's this duality that makes Us work on two operatic levels: a familiar yet pulse-pounding set-up of a family trying to survive a home invasion, as well as a wildly conceptual existential dread-fest that ties in such gigantic conversations as race in America. When an African American family (a detail that isn't relevant to the story until you think about it symbolically afterwards) vacations at their beach house, haunting memories can't help but pop up for Adelaide (Lupita Nyong'o), who remembers an experience she had when she, as a little girl back in 1986, wandered away from her family one night at the boardwalk only to find herself face to face with another girl – her exact self. It's enough to make for a traumatic childhood that makes her feel not quite herself and sets the stage for years later when her family becomes the targets of home invaders – frighteningly and inconceivably

News for the City of Good Neighbors from an Old Guy Named Norb Huber

SQUIRM

I had a lot of positive support emailed my way after last week's report of a dissatisfied reader. I know when I talk about God people start to squirm. The only thing worse would be for me to talk about collusion or no collusion. I'm not writing this stuff to win a popular vote, my politicking days are long gone. I'm not writing to convince you to vote conservative. I just try to say whatever pops in my head while I'm typing and if you like it, good, if not, just toss me in the trash. I have the best of all worlds, I don't live there anymore, the newspaper loves my copy each week since I volunteer to write for them, I can say whatever I want and who cares if I make a fool out of myself or not. If you 16 and a quarter loyal readers ever get sick of me, I will be the first to stop this mess. One of my relatives wanted to know not why? or why not?, but when will I stop torturing him? So start squirming. I have to tell you that God loves you regardless of who you are and what you have done. Trust in God's almighty power and in his grace to save you. Oh yea, by the way, there was no collusion and I for one, along with a lot of other God fearing, flag waving, bible carrying Americans pray that God will continue to make America great. Maybe all of that makes you a little uneasy. I hear a cold one is a good cure for squirming, come to think of it, a cold one pretty much is a cure for anything that ails you. Stop squirming and enjoy life.

DMV

So I moved up here to NorCal last June and I figured that I would simply go to the DMV and get a new drivers' license with my new address on it. No, I found out that you have to wait until your renewal time to get a new card. My 64th birthday is coming up in May so I received a renewal notice in February. I called to make an appointment and found out that the earliest appointment time was six weeks away at the end of March. Finally my appointment day arrived this week. I knew I had to bring all kinds of documents in to prove that I am Norbert Allen Huber and I am an American citizen living in Orangevale, CA. After submitting my passport, birth certificate, social security card, utility bill showing my new address and my new house's property tax bill, I qualified to get a "Real ID/Drivers' License. (I thought I always had a real drivers license, but now I needed a REAL ID to get on an airplane.) I was told to stand in a different line to have my photo taken. I thought I was done, but no, without any warning I was told to go over to a computer to take an 18 multiple question driver's knowledge test. Wow! No study, no review, just cold turkey. I was feeling pretty good about getting the answers all right until I ran into two questions related to drinking and driving. You know me, I'm your "have a cold one" advocate. You would think I would know a thing or two about drinking and driving. No, I missed both questions, incorrectly saying that a 0.05% blood alcohol level constituted drunk driving when it was really 0.08%. The amount of beverage consumption can certainly have dramatically different effects on different people. It doesn't take a whole lot to get me going. I get high on life even before I enjoy a cold one. So, I usually don't have more than one. It's never been about quantity in life that makes the difference but the quality of enjoyment. I would consider having a cold one with a friend or family member quality time, well spent. Slow down smell the aromas of life. Biologists say that the most keen sense that we have is our sense of smell. Smelling a good cold one is like hugging your sister. God may have given us five senses, but tasting a cold one is a tough sense to beat. Enjoy life, enjoy touching, feeling, listening, smelling, tasting, but just do it all responsibly, don't drink and drive.

Purrrfect Companions

Margaret

March is the purr-fect month to adopt your new best friends. These little lambs may not “roar like lions,” but they will surely purr with joy when you give them a forever home.

Brothers Zane and Max are teddy bears. They love snuggles and purr when you look over to greet and sit on their lap. Both are a “guy’s guy.” They are very social cats and would be great paired together or with another friendly cat. They love dogs too, but need the company of another friendly cat to play with and meet their social needs. They at them. They are also very smart and curious explorers. With their outgoing, happy and polite personalities, they are ready to play any minute. If they hear a toy, they will wake up out of a deep sleep and be ready for action. But these brothers are also mellow guys and love spending time with people. Zane and Max are affectionate with everyone. When men visit, they go right have been raised with friendly dogs and like respectful kids too.

Margaret is a former bottle baby. Now she’s still a baby, only without the bottle. She loves to be cuddled and held. Rather than jump onto your lap, Margaret will walk by and tempt you to pick her up. Her fur is soft and her stripes are petite. She is a beautiful kitty with a pretty face. Margaret needs to be adopted into a home with another cat or kitten. If you don’t have a kitty companion for her, then she will need to be adopted with another kitten. She lives at our adoption center with 10 other kittens including her brothers Radar, Klinger and Frank. She gets along well with all of them, so finding her a friend will not be difficult.

Also a former bottle baby, Klinger is a sweet and sensitive boy. He likes to be held, but he forgets that he likes it and will push away at first. He then will settle into your arms and look up into your eyes. Once comfortable, Klinger will give you his time and attention for as long as you need. Klinger is adorably cute. He needs to be adopted into a home with another cat or kitten or can be adopted with another kitten. This easygoing boy is at our adoption center with his siblings and other kittens who would all be good potential kitty companions for him.

Sydney is a young, beautifully elegant, steel-grey young cat with amazingly soft fur. She is observant, calm and playful. She prefers to come to you and sit near or above you – not a lap cat... at least not yet. Sydney will watch you as you move about and race you to her favorite play spots to engage you in play. Wand toys and strings are her favorite and she is quite athletic. She currently loves to play with her son and housemate, Marlon. Although she is not shy, she needs a quiet household where she can feel safe so she can strut about contentedly.

Klinger

Marlon is sleek and gorgeous with lamp-like yellow, green eyes and a silky black coat accented with a patch of white on the chest. Marlon is inquisitive, playful and so sweet. He loves to chase wand toys, toy mice, ping pong balls... and to cuddle. Marlon purrs upon contact. He will even purr when you just speak to him. He climbs up to be with you on the bed or sofa and “makes muffins” at your side. We like to call him Mellow Marlon because he truly likes to chill. Marlon needs a young companion cat with whom to be active and play... and yes, cuddle. Currently, he enjoys the company of his young mama, Sydney. This boy is very special. He will warm your heart with his heart-shaped face and calm demeanor.

These kitties are available for adoption through Kitten Rescue, one of the largest cat rescue groups in Southern California. All our kitties are spayed/neutered, microchipped, tested for FeLV and FIV, dewormed and current on their vaccinations. For additional information and to see these or our other kittens and cats, please check our website www.kittenrescue.org or email us at mail@kittenrescue.org.

Your tax-deductible donations for the rescue and care of our cats and kittens can be made through our website or by sending a check payable to Kitten Rescue, 914 Westwood Blvd. #583, Los Angeles, CA 90024.

On Saturdays, we have adoptions from noon to 3:30 p.m. in Westchester at 8655 Lincoln Blvd. just south of Manchester Ave. and also in Mar Vista at 3860 Centinela Ave, just south of Venice Boulevard. Our website lists additional adoption sites and directions to each location.

Adopting one animal may not change the world, but it will forever change the world for that animal. •

qualify for increased incentives if located within a California disadvantaged community census tract," says the Air Resources Board website.

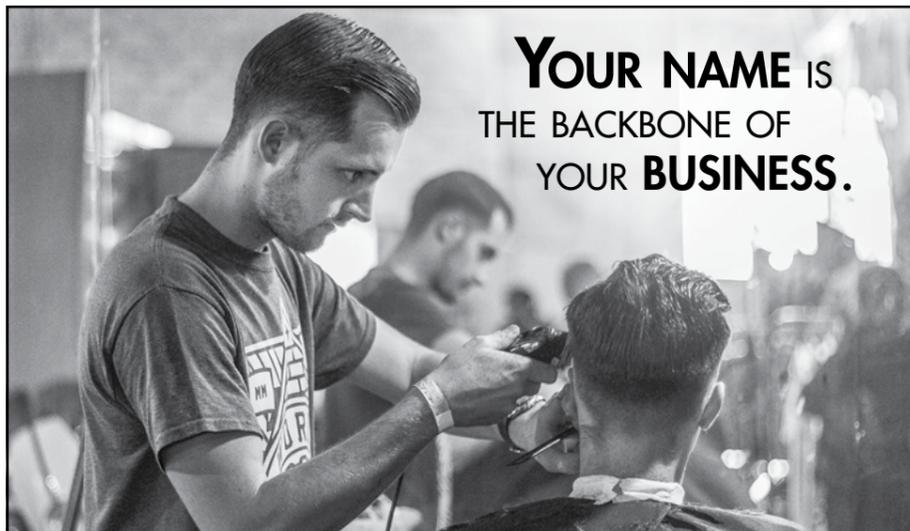

Under the law pushing motorists to switch to all-electric cars and SUVs, California will require that about 8 percent of the new cars sold by automakers be battery-powered. In a blog posted on the Union of Concerned Scientists website, a clean vehicle engineer wrote two years ago that automakers have proven they can meet the state's EV goals.

David Reichmuth in his blog, "What Will It Take for Automakers to Meet California's EV Requirements?" said sales were already trending toward more zero-emissions cars -- even four years ago. While Gov. Brown's goal of 1.5 million electric vehicles by 2025 was a stretch back then, the engineer wrote that it wasn't out of reach for the carmakers.

The silver lining in the sales numbers of all-electric vehicles was they had grown in back-to-back years. "EV sales in California increased 18 percent from 2015 and 3.5 percent of all new cars in the state were plug-in electric, up from 3.1 percent last year," he wrote. "But the story is more impressive when you consider several major automakers were absent from the market in 2016. If we exclude the two major automakers without a plug-in EV in 2016 [Honda and Toyota], EV sales would have exceeded 5 percent of new car sales in California."
