Education Budget Will Be Hard to Balance for Inglewood District

By Haleemon Anderson

Money matters occupied last week’s Inglewood School Board meeting, as Chief Business Official Eugenio Villa presented the members with a revised budget that portends cuts and layoffs. According to Villa’s calculations, Inglewood Unified School District will run out of money by 2018-19 “[if] $9 million in ongoing reductions are not achieved.”

In PowerPoint slides, Villa contrasted the revised 2017-18 budget against the 2016-17 unaudited actuals and surmised that “the 2016-17 adopted budget, first interim and second interim reports had understated the budget deficits for both 2016-17 and subsequent years.”

Villa said budget “planning tools” had been “optimistic or incorrect” in predicting the looming deficit. Two factors complicate the budget-- mandated pension costs and continued declining enrollment. Since state funding is tied to enrollment, the District’s money problems will endure unless it can staunch the decline in student numbers caused by charter schools and other factors.

“We will go forward and address these structural deficits,” said Villa. He assured the group that the District is committed to investing in “facilities and instructional programs,” and keeping reductions “as far away from the classroom as possible.”

To address the shortfall and “shore up” the general fund for this year, Villa said he has “reconciled thousands of accounts.” He also instituted a “one-time budgetary measure,” forgoing a $3.2 million contribution to the Worker’s Compensation Fund. This emergency measure was enacted in closing out the 2016-17 books.

Villa said several measures are being taken to start saving. There is a freeze on hiring and overtime across all employee categories, he said. Next, the District will look at departmental budget cuts of up to 20 percent. “We expect some improvement at the first interim report, by December 15,” said Villa.

Still, moving forward, proposed remedies are dire—school consolidations, reductions in management, classified and certificated staff, and concessions in employee compensation and benefits are potentially on the chopping block.

Board Member D’Artagnan Scorza voiced a course of action, stating, “We need to have a strategic focus on revenue generation, i.e., increasing enrollment, since we can’t cut our way out of this.”

Scorza asked Villa what number of students would be needed to avoid layoffs. Villa estimated an additional student enrollment of 900 would infuse the District with the state funds needed to balance the budget and mitigate other fiscal concerns. The assumption within this equation projects state funding at $10,000 per student, for a total windfall of $9 million.

Board President Carliss McGhee expressed concern with employees who don’t send their school-aged children to Inglewood schools. “What can we do to bring those students back?” asked McGhee.

Scorza referenced the IUSD Educational Foundation Board, saying, “I’m willing to put foundation dollars into this effort to get employee buy-in on recruitment.”

The District has enlisted the services of Mariam Morris, a consultant on outreach and parent engagement, who presented at the previous meeting. “We want to re-brand ourselves,” she has said. She is developing a strategy to “turn around” the current enrollment “crisis” by the 2018-19 school year.

Morris, whose son attends elementary school at Inglewood Unified, envisioned a multi-pronged public relations campaign including community events, focus groups and direct marketing. She said most students leave the District between fifth and sixth grade, or in the transition between elementary and middle school. Heavy charter saturation in the area also leads to turnover.

In public comments, recently-elected President of the Inglewood Teachers Association Abu Ngissah also spoke on the critical need to enroll more students. She said the organization is sponsoring a community outreach event on October 26. “We have to go out and recruit,” said Ngissah.

Resident Shawn Cook said he was a member of the firm tasked with the District’s audit. “We are building all over Inglewood, but not schools,” said Cook. “Parents will come back,” when the appearance of schools improves, said Cook.

Resident Patricia Villa Gomez requested the Board look into compliance issues in the special education department, asking for a review of the director. “Please make sure the well-being of our children is not compromised,” said Gomez.

Student Representatives to the Advisory Council were present to give the Board an update on the start of the school year. Kaiya Farmer, a senior at City Honors College Prep Academy, reported the schoolyear is off to a great start, and credited a smooth transition to several summer programs and workshops held by the District. Farmer said she plans to attend Howard University.

Larenee Gordon, a senior at Inglewood Continuation High School, thanked Principal Debbie Tate for her leadership at the alternative high school. Gordon is a senior and said she will pursue a career as a physician’s assistant.

The Inglewood Unified School District Board meets once monthly. The next meeting is scheduled for Wednesday, October 11, at 5:30 p.m. at 401 S. Inglewood Avenue, in the Dr. Ernest Shaw Board Room. • with their doctors about their hearing as a routine part of their medical care.

Tips to Prepare your Budget Before Buying a Home

2. Addressing hearing loss often has a positive impact on quality of life. Most people who currently wear hearing aids say it has helped their general ability to communicate, participate in group activities and their overall quality of life, according to BHI research. The research also shows that people with hearing loss who use hearing aids are more likely to be optimistic, feel engaged in life, get more pleasure in doing things, have a strong social network and are more likely to tackle problems actively. Many even say they feel more confident and better about themselves as a result of using hearing aids.

3. Leaving hearing loss untreated may come at a financial cost. Most hearing aid users in the workforce say it has helped their performance on the job. In fact, BHI research found that using hearing aids reduced the risk of income loss by 90 to 100 percent for those with milder hearing loss, and from 65 to 77 percent for those with severe to moderate hearing loss. People with untreated hearing loss can lose as much as $30,000 in income annually, the BHI research found. Health care spending may also be affected. For instance, middle-aged adults (55-64) with diagnosed hearing loss had substantially higher health care costs, according to a study published in JAMA Otolaryngology-Head & Neck Surgery, indicating that hearing loss may place patients at risk for increased health care use and costs. The study authors suggested that early, successful intervention may prevent future hearing-related disabilities and decreased quality of life. program). Using this method will typically save you between 15 and 20 percent per month on your mortgage payment, but you could owe a portion of the appreciation on the home when you sell.

Homeowners association fees: Fortunately, not all homes have a homeowners association to pay into. Purchasing a home with HOA-covered amenities could cost, on average, an additional $200-$400 per month.

Maintenance fees: Ah, the pitfalls of being a homeowner. The costs that would normally fall to a landlord, like fixing broken plumbing or a heater on the fritz, will now fall on your shoulders. Some suggest saving one percent of your home's value annually for maintenance.

Utility costs: Unless your rent has included the cost of utilities, this is probably already an expense you're used to. However, if you're moving into a bigger home with less energy efficient appliances, you should be prepared to see an uptick.

If you want to avoid experiencing sticker shock after your home purchase is complete, start living like a homeowner now.

Consider your current rental or home-ownership costs and compare them to the costs for a home in your target price point. Can your current budget handle the difference? Are you still able to pay for your necessities plus shore up your financial future through short- and long-term savings? Or do you find yourself feeling desperate by the end of the month?

Now that you know where your money is going, determine the unnecessary leaks. Maybe your monthly food bill is exorbitantly high. Or maybe your subscription services have gotten out of hand. If your priority is purchasing a home - and being financially comfortable in that home - work to cut expenses that are contradictory to that goal. •

UCLA Bruins, Josh Rosen Wilt in the Memphis Sun

By Adam Serrao

All of the talk this year surrounding the UCLA football program has been centered on Bruins quarterback Josh Rosen. Rosen, the unquestioned leader of the Bruins, is touted to be a top pick in next year's NFL Draft, if not the number one player off the board. Last Saturday at Liberty Memorial Stadium in Memphis, Tennessee, Rosen wasn't the quarterback blooming on the national stage like all initially expected. Instead, Memphis Tigers quarterback Riley Ferguson managed to best Rosen in the game and in the stat line. In doing so, the Tigers not only won the game by a final of 48-45, but the unranked team also illustrated just how vulnerable the draft prospect and the Bruins can actually be.

The Bruins have looked rather flawed in multiple areas during this year's young college football season. That much has certainly been clear, beginning with UCLA's game two weeks ago against the Texas A&M Aggies in which Rosen had to orchestrate a comeback from 34 points down in order to pull out an extremely exciting, nail-biting, last-second victory. Last week's game against Memphis may have been equally as exciting...but despite the amount of big plays and the massive score total, Rosen and the Bruins not only had their luck run dry, but also may just have been completely exposed in the process.

Ferguson didn't just lead his team to victory. He threw for 398 yards and six touchdowns while matching, if not outplaying, Rosen every step of the way. For all intents and purposes, Rosen put up his share of decent numbers too, throwing for a massive amount of 463 yards and four touchdown passes on 56 attempts. Despite those gaudy numbers, however, this game was more about what Rosen didn't do as opposed to what he did do.

The game against Memphis marked the first time in the Bruins' initial three contests that a flaw in Rosen's game had sprung its nasty head. Rosen, in UCLA's pass-first offense, did not throw an interception in either of his team's first two games and two victories of the season. Last week, he managed to throw two interceptions, one of which was returned 60 yards for a touchdown by Memphis linebacker Tim Hart in the third quarter. Though Rosen's other interception wasn't returned for points, it came at an even worse time in the game. With under seven minutes remaining and UCLA looking for an edge that would give it the game, Rosen's second interception of the afternoon not only stalled a Bruins drive that was currently deep in Memphis territory, but also wound up losing his team the game.

"I had no doubt we were going to go down and score at the end," said a dejected Rosen after the game. "I just made some stupid mistakes. I made 10 points worth of really bad plays." For the junior Rosen, this game, as much as any that the starting quarterback has ever played in, can be chalked up to a becoming a great learning experience for a quarterback who will undoubtedly wind up playing on Sundays next year or the year after. In the meantime, however, those mistakes were perhaps the biggest reason that the Bruins lost their first game of the season and have taken a step back in this year's college football Top 25 rankings.

UCLA head coach Jim Mora chimed in when asked about the poor decisions made by his star quarterback. "He made some really good plays and obviously, he would love to have the turnovers back," Mora explained. "He has to learn to be a little more careful with the ball." Even Rosen admitted that he was trying to do too much to lead his team back from behind and to a victory for the second week in a row. "It's trying to play hero ball," he explained. "You have to play within the system."

That system may be as much to blame for the loss as Rosen could be. Despite racking up 633 yards of total offense, the running game looked to be almost anemic for most of the day. In the box score, Jalen Starks came away with six carries for 20 yards and a touchdown, but he was the fifth running back on the roster to even touch the ball. In all, seven players on offense carried the football, including Rosen, for a total of 170 yards. That's not to mention the defense that allowed one 100-yard rusher and just less than 400 yards total receiving from Memphis wide receivers. Five different Tigers receivers caught touchdown passes, including Anthony Miller who caught two and hauled in 185 yards through the air.

The loss was a crushing blow for Rosen and the Bruins, who entered the Top 25 for the first time this year going into last week and held the last spot in the rankings available. Now UCLA will have a lot of work to do in order to erase the mistakes made. Rosen will likely continue to find success under center, but the Bruins will attempt to get back into the rankings when they take on the Stanford Cardinal in what should be a tough matchup this week. Looking ahead, UCLA's schedule seems to sport a relatively mild difficulty level, outside of matchups at Washington and at USC later in the season. If the Bruins want any shot at a possible Pac-12 championship or even a playoff appearance this year, they'll certainly have to limit their mistakes and shore up what has already shown itself to be a porous defense in order to do so. • – Aserrao6@yahoo.com

September's Disasters Hold Lessons for the South Bay

By Rob McCarthy

South Bay residents could be forgiven for thinking they've heard this all before. Disasters don't plan ahead, but you can. Yet, September's wildfires and Mexico's strong earthquake have injected an urgency in the local readiness campaign, which kicks off this month against a backdrop of natural disasters throughout the country.

"The timing is just right," said spokesman Ken Kondo with the county's emergency management team. "We have our Los Angeles County Prepareathon--a program that pairs with FEMA to prepare residents and businesses for emergencies and disasters [trying] to get them educated, prepared and trained before disaster hits."

The Prepareathon runs from September through November with public events nearby in Gardena, Torrance and Long Beach. The safety fairs and emergency-response training sessions represent the calm before the proverbial storm for South Bay communities that are accustomed to fires, earthquakes and refinery emergencies.

This year, while FEMA was mobilizing thousands of responders and relief employees to the hurricane disaster zones in Texas and Florida, Los Angeles County was confronting its own seasonal danger: a wildfire that started September 1 near Burbank. The La Tuna Fire burned 7,000 acres and forced evacuation of 1,400 people while fire crews fought the blaze.

It's being called the largest acreage fire in the history of Los Angeles, and the damage was limited to a few structures and no lives were lost. One firefighter was treated for minor burns, according to reports.

Residents were invited last Saturday to communitywide disaster-readiness expos in Long Beach and Gardena. They offered a glimpse of what local households and neighborhoods can expect, and what they should pack away in an emergency supply kit. A family of four needs at least 12 gallons of drinking water, attendees learned, along with how to purify containers using a solution of water, bleach and dish detergent.

The fourth annual event in Long Beach was a collaboration of Long Beach emergency agencies, nonprofits, businesses and area response agencies, including L.A. County's. The Gardena event was a second annual preparedness fair hosted by the Japanese Cultural Institute. Among the topics discussed Saturday was how to get neighbors involved and talking about disasters. One of the simplest and most direct ways is for individuals to get first aid-certified and take disaster response training, according to the L.A. County team. The first responders in any emergency are next-door neighbors and people living and working in a building together.

There is still time to find a seminar or a responder training session through Los Angeles County's campaign. The next nearby Prepareathon event takes place from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. October 27 at the Sunnyside Nursing Center in Torrance. Evacuation and safety of older residents in an emergency will be discussed. This event at 22617 S. Vermont Avenue is open to the public.

All county-sponsored events this month and next are built around four themes to guide proactive South Bay residents, property owners and caregivers to the homebound or disabled. An emergency kit with food, water and medicine is a must-have before and after a disaster strikes, the federal and local campaigns stress. When it will happen, no one can say, according to L.A. County's spokesman Kondo. But when the ground starts shaking, or an evacuation order follows a sonic boom explosion in El Segundo, Torrance or San Pedro, it'll be too late to start thinking about who and what to grab while rushing out the door or window.

Though it's too late to register for today's American Red Cross Disaster Preparedness Academy in Anaheim, surrounding communities will benefit from this 33rd annual event. Experts led daylong seminars on active shooters, earthquakes, evacuation planning, school and university preparedness, business preparedness and resiliency planning, drills and exercises, according to the Red Cross organizers. Contact the academy about upcoming trainings in the area by calling 714-481-5341 or emailing RedCrossDPA@redcross.org.

The American Red Cross also offers certified training to individuals and employers in first aid, CPR, disaster response and other lifesaving measures. Course information and the advantages of being a trained first responder in the home, office or neighborhood are explained in detail at www.redcross.org/ux/take-a-class.

Readiness is about knowing beforehand how to escape a building and account for everyone in the family or office once outside, according to Kondo. The Torrance refinery explosion in 2015 is a recent reminder of how an emergency can happen without warning and upend a seemingly normal day in the South Bay. Four people were injured by the blast, which catapulted 80,000 pieces of debris that landed a few feet from a tank holding a highly toxic chemical. The U.S. Chemical Safety Board investigated the explosion and said the acid could have formed a vapor cloud that traveled for miles across Torrance. Even small amounts of the acid can be lethal, the investigators said, and Torrance was spared a life-threatening event.

Torrance was the site of another refinery-related emergency last October when a flare-off knocked out power to surrounding cities and nearby residents were ordered to stay indoors. A flare-off occurs when a refinery relieves pressure to "ensure gases are safely combusted" instead of being released into the air, the Torrance Police and Fire departments explained during the Torrance Refinery Company incident on October 11, 2016.

Power outages from the flare-off were reported in Hawthorne, Gardena, Manhattan and Redondo Beach. Torrance schools were closed for the day, and the refinery was shut down for the public's safety. Southern California calamities aren't like the hurricanes in the Gulf and Atlantic, which follow a season and come with a warning to flee or ride out the storm. Local disasters come on suddenly, with a sonic boom or a shaking of the ground. Clear thinking isn't always possible when the building is rumbling and sirens start wailing, the experts say.

That day will come as it has before, Kondo says. The best defense is knowing beforehand how to react during the initial disaster and then how to survive the next 24 to 48 hours if an evacuation order is declared. Instinct is not a substitute for having an emergency kit packed and ready to grab, including prescription medications and comfort foods and extra socks and a fresh change of clothes, according to Kondo. That represents a bare-minimum level of preparedness that can soothe jangled nerves and put the ordeal into better perspective. "The time is now to prepare and be ready for these types of natural and/or manmade disasters," he says.

Local disaster experts encourage South Bay residents and community and church groups to learn about the four levels of readiness, which are covered in this month's county-led Preparedness campaign:

Week 1: Take the initiative to make a plan for yourself, family and friends.

Week 2: Decide how to help your neighbor and the community to handle a crisis.

Week 3: Practice in advance and try out your plan.

Week 4: Get involved with the community wide effort, be "part of something bigger."

You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may

Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. # Cassini Spacecraft Makes Its Final Approach to Saturn

Based on a Press Release from NASA, Provided by Bob Eklund

NASA's Cassini spacecraft is on final approach to Saturn, following confirmation by mission navigators that it is on course to dive into the planet's atmosphere on Friday, September 15.

Cassini is ending its 13-year tour of the Saturn system with an intentional plunge into the planet to ensure Saturn's moons—in particular Enceladus, with its subsurface ocean and signs of hydrothermal activity--remain pristine for future exploration. The spacecraft's fateful dive is the final beat in the mission's Grand Finale, 22 weekly dives, which began in late April, through the gap between Saturn and its rings. No spacecraft has ever ventured so close to the planet before.

The mission's final calculations predict loss of contact with the Cassini spacecraft will take place on September 15 at 4:55 a.m. PDT. Cassini will enter Saturn's atmosphere approximately one minute earlier, at an altitude of about 1,190 miles above the planet's estimated cloud tops (the altitude where the air pressure is 1-bar, equivalent to sea level on Earth). During its dive into the atmosphere, the spacecraft's speed will be approximately 70,000 miles per hour. The final plunge will take place on the day side of Saturn, near local noon, with the spacecraft entering the atmosphere around 10 degrees north latitude.

When Cassini first begins to encounter Saturn's atmosphere, the spacecraft's attitude control thrusters will begin firing in short bursts to work against the thin gas and keep Cassini's saucer-shaped high-gain antenna pointed at Earth to relay the mission's precious final data. As the atmosphere thickens, the thrusters will be forced to ramp up their activity, going from 10 percent of their capacity to 100 percent in the span of about a minute. Once they are firing at full capacity, the thrusters can do no more to keep Cassini stably pointed, and the spacecraft will begin to tumble.

When the antenna points just a few fractions of a degree away from Earth, communications will be severed permanently. The predicted altitude for loss of signal is approximately 930 miles above Saturn's cloud tops. From that point, the spacecraft will begin to burn up like a meteor. Within about 30 seconds following loss of signal, the spacecraft will begin to come apart. Within a couple of minutes, all remnants of the spacecraft are expected to be completely consumed in the atmosphere of Saturn.

Chief among the observations being made as Cassini dives into Saturn are those of the Ion and Neutral Mass Spectrometer (INMS). The instrument will directly sample the composition and structure of the atmosphere, which cannot be done from orbit. The spacecraft will be oriented so that INMS is pointed in the direction of motion, to allow it the best possible access to oncoming atmospheric gases.

For the next couple of days, as Saturn looms ever larger, Cassini expects to take a last look around the Saturn system, snapping a few final images of the planet, features in its rings, and the moons Enceladus and Titan. The final set of views from Cassini's imaging cameras is scheduled to be taken and transmitted to Earth on Thursday, September 14. If all goes as planned, images will be posted to the Cassini mission website beginning around 11 p.m. EDT (8 p.m. PDT). The unprocessed images will be available at: <https://saturn.jpl.nasa.gov/galleries/raw-images>. •
