No Worries: LAX Passengers Can See What They’ve Been Missing

Minnie Mouse didn’t make it home for Christmas.

By Rob McCarthy

The people who reunite passengers and their property at Los Angeles International Airport have a soft spot for teddy bears that miss their flights. LAX rolled out a new system on Dec. 13 that makes it easier to reunite plush buddies with their kids. Starting on National Lost and Found Day, the airport began posting online images of the 5,000 to 7,000 personal items that get left behind every month. That’s enough cuddly bears, luggage, coats and electronics to fill a huge warehouse.

Running LAX’s lost and found is a huge job, so the people responsible looked at the reunification process and decided there was room for improvement. That responsibility falls on the airport’s police force, which now photographs the new arrivals into lost and found department. The eclectic inventory includes big and small bears, a chainsaw and surfboards.

The new system doesn’t just give property away to anyone, however. It asks for some proof, especially for expensive electronic devices, like a password that authorities can use to verify ownership. A little technology is going a long way at the airport, where 230 items per day are left at TSA checkpoints, at restaurants, restrooms or passenger-waiting areas.

The browsing feature streamlines the process of filing a claim for a beloved stuffed animal or a computer, according to Barbara Yamamoto, who is Director of Guest Experience and Innovation, Los Angeles World Airports. There’s a large Mickey Mouse on the warehouse shelves. Nearby are backpacks, duffle bags and a small fleet of strollers.

The new claims system at FlyLAX.com lets anyone search through found items from the airport. Owners may file a claim immediately, however, airport officials request as much information as possible about where an item was misplaced, the date, time and a description. It helps to be able to provide unique characteristics to the property officers.

Once claims processors verify the claim and confirm a match, they will notify the owners who can pick up their property at LAX or arrange to have it shipped to them.

The most common items that wind up in the LAX Lost and Found are laptops and tablets, belts, wallets and clothing. Someone left a big-screen television, which is at the warehouse. Another person left one shoe. A large teddy bear is patiently waiting, too.

Airport police will be on the lookout for eyeglasses, keys and identification cards that go missing. Watches and jewelry, shoes, clothing items and bicycles also make the list. It takes between three and four days for items to post to the LAX Lost and Found site. It also includes links to the airlines and rental car agencies, too. The Lost and Found Department collects and processes items found anywhere on airport property, with a few exceptions.

LAX isn’t responsible for anything left on an airplane, at the U.S. Customs and Border Protection, or at rental car companies. Capt. Michael Scolaro who runs the Lost and Found office says that airport police make every effort to reunite owners with their property. Those efforts will be enhanced greatly by the addition of the online LAX Lost and Found, he predicted.

Computer access to the recovered property and claims-filing paperwork streamlines the process for guests and the airport police personnel. Recovered items are kept for at least 90 days before being sent to the City of Los Angeles’ auction site, or donated to the Salvation Army or Goodwill. LAX maintains one of the largest and busiest airport Lost and Found departments in the country. Staff recover as many as 230 items per day from the airport’s nine terminals.

Anyone who’s lost something at LAX can save time by going online to search for it and file a claim. Then, visit the Lost and Found office at 5600 W. Century Blvd. Monday through Friday between 8 a.m. and 3 p.m. The station’s number is (424) 646-5678.

The lost and found system is a bit tricky to navigate, so go to lawa.v2.crowdfind.com/public/#/lax/new-claim and use the pull-down menu to streamline the process. Identify what was lost at the airport, and the web site displays the items matching the description.

The FlyLAX web site recommends the following steps to take:

- Contact your airline first about lost suitcases or other items.
- Call U.S. Customs for lost passports at (310) 665-4560.
- You submit a general claim if you cannot find your item on the website. •

Lost or abandoned baby strollers are stacked up.

Film Review

1917 is a Triumph, Unlike Anything You’ve Ever Seen

By Morgan Rojas for cinemacy.com

Much like the young soldiers in the film, director Sam Mendes set out on a seemingly impossible mission: create a feature-length WWI film in a single take. That’s 119 minutes of real-time conflict and non-stop adrenaline rush, in one take. Not only is 1917’s mere existence already a success, but it’s also one of the most technically proficient, emotionally compelling, and jaw-dropping goliaths of a war film that I’ve ever seen. Set in the desolate trenches behind British lines, 1917, now playing in theaters, will undeniably rank side by side with some of the best war films of all time.

Often, the individual faces of soldiers are lost amongst a sea of thousands of uniformed troops; 1917 puts a face to two brave young men who were willing to sacrifice all they had to save the lives of others. On April 6th, 1917, Privates Schofield (George MacKay) and Blake (Dean-Charles Chapman) are selected for a potentially deadly mission. They are to deliver a time-sensitive and life-saving message to their neighboring battalion troop of 1,600 men ordering them to cease their scheduled attack against the Germans. The attack, it turns out, would be an ambush, killing the British soldiers, including Private Blake’s older brother. Schofield and Blake only have until dawn the next morning to relay the news, and so begins the race against the clock, the Germans, and the pan’s labyrinth of battlefield death traps they’ll encounter along the way.

Technically speaking, 1917 is no doubt a cinematic feat, and the same can be said on screen with much praise belonging to George MacKay. As the lead in what is likely one of the most challenging films of any actor’s career, he carries 1917 with strength and a certain sweetness. His performance is astounding, both physically and emotionally. Dean-Charles Chapman equally commands the screen as a desperate young soldier who will do whatever it takes to help his brother. Andrew Scott, Benedict Cumberbatch, and Richard Madden also contribute their talents, rounding out a powerhouse ensemble cast.

What’s equally as impressive as the film itself is the credits, which run almost 10 minutes. The thousands of names that scroll across the screen are a sharp reminder of the amount of work, time, money, and passion that goes into making a film, especially one of this size and caliber. Highlighted in the thousands of names are frequent Mendes-collaborators, including cinematographer Richard Deakins (Skyfall) and composer Thomas Newman (American Beauty). Their contributions to 1917 make the film what it is: unforgettable.

There have been a handful of war films this year, A Hidden Life, Jojo Rabbit, and Midway, all telling specific stories of life on the outskirts or battlefields of their respective wars. While powerful in their own way, nothing holds a candle to the brute force imagery that 1917 pulls off. Based on the audible “wows” from the audience and minutes-long applause as the credits rolled during my press screening, it looks like Mendes and company will be a frontrunner in the battle for Best Picture this awards season. •

Citizen Scientist: Silent Earth Project Maps Quiet and Kerrangs

By Tommy Vinh Bui, MLIS, Associate Librarian, Inglewood Public Library

The holiday hubbub can be a carol-fueled cacophony of noise and tumult. From the squelch of sneakers on fluorescent-lit linoleum floors to the nonstop deluge of seasonal tunes droning through mall PA systems. It’s enough to have one popping aspirins like Tic Tacs all the livelong day. Exasperating and everlasting, it seems.

The Silent Earth Project’s new logo.

But there does exist a small cove of relief for your ears. The Silent Earth Project compels everyday Citizen Scientists to rally together and seek out quiet places in your local community. This dulcet eardrum-soothing endeavor encourages residents to use their smartphones to record sound level measurements systematically in their own communities. The ultimate objective is to study and discover outdoor spaces with the lowest decibel range within any given region. These sound measurements take just a moment but contribute greatly to the study of noise pollution in urban and rural environments. The acoustical data returned gets synthesized and represented on a map by the National Park Service displaying where the quietest and, conversely, loudest locales are coast to coast in the United States. It’s an ambitious project that will help construct a clearer picture of the acoustical flux and change that communities undergo. Be it the gentle nocturnal murmur of cicadas or the roaring blast of turbine engines rending over Inglewood skies.

Current data shows that the eastern half of the United States tends to skew louder than the western part. The National Park Service map strives to be comprehensive by recording both natural and manmade sounds and, as expected, the highest densities of ear-wrenching volumes are commonly found in populated urban centers. The National Parks Service’s Natural Sounds project is an ongoing aim that has so far recorded 1.5 million hours’ worth of long-term soundscape measurements across sites scattered throughout the contiguous United States. The data collected is thorough and the map created combines samples with nuanced information such as latitude and longitude along with date and time of day recorded. Other datum that is represented in the map includes climate and moisture levels. Researchers have discovered that wetter locales containing thick vegetation and flora tend to be noisier than converse ecosystems such as deserts or alpine meadows. Other useful information that is collected includes topographic details such as elevation along with biodiversity data and seasonal variability.

So be inspired and be involved with environmental sound stewardship and aid in the study of the preservation of vulnerable soundscapes by helping to collect and monitor critical information about noise levels in your own community. Be it the chorus of birdsong that wafts through your garden or the mechanical chug of local subway cars lumbering through your corner intersection. All sounds and data gathered will help researchers gain a better understanding of our surroundings and connection to the natural world. I’d be hard pressed to argue otherwise that natural sounds are considered a valuable resource for wellbeing and a significant attribute to a region’s all-around welfare and vigor. Research has shown that exposure to natural sounds yields tremendous health benefits for individuals such as reducing stress, improving moods, increasing cognitive acuity, and inducing overall social well-being. The societal benefits are manifestly manifold.

And what better place can you experience the salubrious effects of silence than at your neighborhood public library. Where the sound of pages being rustled never crawls above a whisper and lips quietly mouth paragraphs that enrapture and capture the reader’s imagination in stark repose. If you’re looking for a hushed acre of placidity and thoughtful reflection in the hurly-burly of the post-holidays, the library should be your go-to destination. Where the stacks furnish abundant serenity from opening until closing.

One of the last remaining tabernacles of guaranteed tranquility in these migraine-mauling turbulent times. Lumber on in and lap up the life-buoying lull lent at the local public library. •

Prioritize Your Health In The New Year

(BPT) - Now is the time of year when people typically take inventory of their lives and set new goals. Relationships, finances, careers and health are all important aspects that impact overall well-being. For this New Year, consider making your health a top priority.

According to the recent America’s Health Rankings Annual Report, the nation’s obesity rate continues to rise, with one in three adults now experiencing obesity. This alarming statistic may have serious health consequences such as diabetes, which now impacts approximately 30 million adults and is the No. 1 cause of kidney failure, lower-limb amputations and adult blindness, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

There are many factors that play a role in your health, but one that you can control is making a commitment to start living a healthier lifestyle. Sure, there will be some bumps during your well-being journey, but your goal can be achievable and you deserve to reap the benefits.

Ann Marie O’Brien, national director of health strategies at UnitedHealthcare, offers the following tips for achieving a healthier you in 2020.

Stay Active

Regular exercise may help you live longer and may reduce your risks for a host of diseases. Try to aim for at least 2.5 hours of moderate aerobic activity a week, but if that’s too challenging then start off with 15 minutes here and 15 minutes there. Every little bit counts. To be successful, your fitness program should become a part of your daily life.

Also, check with your health plan and employer to see if they offer wellness incentives. For example, UnitedHealthcare’s Gym Check-In program enables participating employers to provide employees and their spouses the opportunity to each earn hundreds of dollars a year for visiting a fitness facility 12 days or more per month.

Eat Healthier

Sure, it’s easier said than done, but good nutrition is a vital part of a healthier lifestyle. Experts say the healthiest diets are rich in fruits and vegetables, because these foods are full of healthful nutrients and fiber. Here are three simple tips to eating healthier: Go for more fruits and veggies; choose less meat and fat; and keep an eye on the size of your food portions. Just saying “no” to the buffet can do wonders.

Reduce Your Stress

If you’re feeling stressed, it’s important to unwind and relax by doing something you enjoy. Maybe it’s watching a movie, reading a book or volunteering to give you time to recharge. Also, make time to connect with others. Maybe that’s friends, family, a faith group or a hobby club. It’s important that you don’t isolate yourself after a stressful event. Remember, if you cannot get a handle on your stress, talk to your doctor. She or he may recommend a counselor who could help you find other ways to help reduce or manage the unhealthy stress in your life.

Team Up with Your Doctor

Take time today to make an appointment with your doctor for your annual wellness visit and be sure to ask about preventive services such as health screenings and vaccines. Check with your health plan as many preventive services have no additional cost, as long they are delivered by care providers in your plan’s network. Your doctor will help you create a treatment plan to help manage any chronic conditions, such as asthma, diabetes and high blood pressure. •

NOTICE OF PETITION TO ADMINISTER ESTATE OF:
ROSEMARY HEBERT AKA ROSEMARY COTNER
CASE NO. 19STPB11874

To all heirs, beneficiaries, creditors, contingent creditors, and persons who may otherwise be interested in the WILL or estate, or both of ROSEMARY HEBERT AKA ROSEMARY COTNER.
A PETITION FOR PROBATE has been filed by BETINA NEWKIRK in the Superior Court of California, County of LOS ANGELES. THE PETITION FOR PROBATE requests that BETINA NEWKIRK be appointed as personal representative to administer the estate of the decedent.
THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act . (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority.
A HEARING on the petition will be held in this court as follows: 01/22/20 at 8:30AM in Dept. 29 located at 111 N. HILL ST., LOS ANGELES, CA 90012
IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney.

IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code.
Other California statutes and legal authority may affect your rights as a creditor. You may want to consult with an attorney knowledgeable in California law.
YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. A Request for Special Notice form is available from the court clerk.
