Wake Up

Booksmart director Olivia Wilde and Once Upon a Time in Hollywood star Margaret Qualley explore the reality of technologyobsessed culture in the branded short film, Wake Up. Backed by computer goliath HP and produced by Anonymous Content, Wake Up is a beautifully shot cautionary tale about the increase in isolation caused by an addiction to technology. When a young woman (Qualley) wakes up, alone, in a hospital with no relocation of how she got there, she sets out to find answers. However, everyone she attempts to connect with is transfixed by their smartphone, computer, or other electronic devices, ignoring the outreach and bid for belonging from our tech-less protagonist. Using her dance background, Qualley gracefully moves and breezes through New York City's densely populated area, literally reaching out to strangers for connection, eye contact, and acknowledgement. Shot by legendary cinematographer Mathew Libatique and scored by indie artist Perfume Genius, Wake Up is a dreamy foreshadowing that a world devoid of human connection is not a joyous one. Let technology aid us in making the world a more connected place, not act as barriers to drive us further away from each other. - Morgan

Wendy

After Benh Zeitlin first blew audiences away with his debut film Beasts of the Southern Wild back in 2012, people have long awaited the director's follow-up film. Eight years later, audiences were finally treated to that film -Wendy - a re-imagining of the beloved Peter Pan tale. Co-written with his sister Eliza, Wendy captures what makes Zeitlin such a visionary and (Devin France), Wendy shows how Peter (Yashua Mack) and the lost boys all came to be. Zeitlin's affinity of conjuring Bayou magical realism makes this a perfect source material to adapt and another incredible feature.

Your Neighborhood Therapist

Dear Neighborhood Therapist: I am a woman in my early sixties and I have lived in and around the South Bay most of my life. I have always done things my own way. I do things like stop and smell the grass. I get excited by the butterflies in my garden or the way a single rain cloud moves down the beach. I have lived my life trying to always be kind and I usually put others' interests before my own. Sometimes people are unkind to me in very specific ways. They dismiss my opinions, and tell me I am "doing it all wrong," and they try to take advantage of me in small and large ways, as if I would not notice. Am I doing "it" wrong? And what is "it" anyway?

- A.U., El Segundo

There is a word for what people are doing to you: bullying. And I think what you are experiencing says a lot more about the bullies than it does about you.

Bullying does not end with grade school - it just changes form. Adult bullies often appear to be enforcers of the "Shoulds" - unwritten social measures that are often both arbitrary and culturally specific.

Enforcers of the Shoulds will go out of their way to tell you everything from how to peel a banana to what to wear to the beach to how you are supposed to feel about Kobe Bryant. Sometimes it comes in the form of an eye roll. More often, it's mansplaining. In any case, bullies feel better when they remind you exactly how far away you are from their own particular set of Shoulds.

It's more complicated because some of us find the Shoulds helpful. We live in a highly competitive, constantly changing society that often leaves us feeling isolated or powerless. A sense of belonging can be hard to come by, and shared Shoulds like cheering for our local team can connect us as a community. The problems arise when we treat the Shoulds as a single true way of being, instead of one valid option among many others.

So the answer is no, you are not doing "it" wrong. You're just standing up for trying to be kind and putting others ahead of yourself in a world that glorifies power instead. Bullies often mistake kindness for weakness, but in choosing your own way, you have chosen a tougher path than that of the bullies.

There is more good news: there are a lot of people like you out there. I meet with many people who outwardly embrace the Shoulds but secretly want a life closer to the one you already have. There are a lot of people - even bullies - who would secretly love to smell the grass, marvel at the butterflies and chase rain clouds. You could teach them a thing or two. Perhaps we should start a local Kindness Club. Any takers?

Film Review

wonderful Michael Stuhlbarg as her husband Stanley Hyman, Josephine Decker's Shirley tells the story of a young couple (Odessa Young, Logan Lerman) whose life becomes forever changed by the odd couple. After accepting room and board in exchange for household chores and companionship, Rose (Young) becomes an accidental muse for Shirley, a famed horror writer. Moss gives a phenomenal performance as the kooky yet brilliant artist whose inner turmoil is a constant battle. Not to be overlooked is Michael Stuhlbarg, who delivers yet another scene stealing monologue that is almost as memorable as his Call Me By Your Name performance. Beautifully captured by Sturla Brandth Grøvlen (Victoria, Wendy), who creates unforgettable cinematic moments and a moody score by Tamar-kali, Shirley is a hauntingly powerful film about a strong from front page woman, made by a strong woman. - Morgan

Kajillionaire

Miranda July's Kajillionaire follows a family of three whose lives revolve around turning one hustle into the next. Oddball outsiders whose very existence require them to stand apart from society in order to break it down and gamify it, director Miranda July similarly stands outside the norm to put life's more strangely beautiful moments onscreen; such as the beauty of soap suds that overflow through a factory ceiling, to pondering some of life's biggest questions like what to do when the big earthquake hits. Led by performances from Evan Rachel Wood and Richard Jenkins, Kajillionaire is a fusion of magic and ordinary life that entertains questions of larger universal life.

Scout was a timid Terrier mix who came to spcaLA on January 4th as a lost dog. It was clear she had had a home before, but no one came to claim her. The spcaLA staff began working with her to help her gain confidence. Luckily on January 25th, she met the perfect parents for her. They recognized her timidity but were drawn to her and could see with a little encouragement, she was a sweet and loving pup. Scout went home with her loving and patient parents and she's doing great! They report she is "amazing" and they "love her so much." •

Congratulations to Scout and her new family!
