A South Bay Sport That is Taking Off

Jim Fenton Is Not Only an Ironman, but Also a Community-Oriented Man

By Duane Plank

South Bay resident Jim Fenton keeps a hectic schedule. He is a private banker, continually active in his church, as well as the local Kiwanis Club, serves as an advisor to the El Segundo High School Key Club, and, when not helping make his clients’ money, or giving back to his community, finds time to train for high-level triathlons and Ironman competitions.

The Fenton family moved to El Segundo nearly 12 years ago from North Carolina, which is where the fictional town of Mayberry was made famous by the iconic Andy Griffith Show six decades ago. Why the cross-country move to a city often referred to by its proponents as Mayberry, he was asked?

He said that he and his wife of, currently 26 years, Donna, and their four young kids (Gabriella, Noah, Jana, and Jack) and had moved to North Carolina because he and his wife thought that the “Tar Heel” state would be a great place to raise a family. He and his wife lived in New York City and in Europe and had “certain expectations” regarding “quality of life, and what our kids would be exposed to.” Fenton said that the area they lived in North Carolina did not meet the family expectations, so the Fentons explored other options, having friends who had been in their wedding and, at that time, were residing in El Segundo.

That prompted a visit to El Segundo back in 2009. “We absolutely loved it,” he said of his experiences in what was to become his new hometown. After the kids wrapped-up their schooling that summer, the Fentons loaded-up the U-Haul, the four kids, and the dog and made the 3,000-mile (Durham to El Segundo) drive across the country.

A private banker by trade, Fenton also serves as the Kiwanis Advisor to the El Segundo High School Key Club. He conducts weekly Wednesday Zoom calls with the students, motivating them to become immersed in community service. Not too long ago, the Key Club members built “the Great Pumpkin” float that, in consort with the El Segundo Police Department, motored through town, delivering candy during the 2020 Halloween season.

A member of the City of Angels International Christian Church, he holds weekly Zoom adult bible-study sessions for an average of 25 parishioners. He also built a program called LifeSkills through a partnership with the organization Mercy Worldwide that aims to teach young people important skills, such as balancing a checkbook, adroitly using credit cards, and being cognizant of the pitfalls of accrued interest payments. He said that it is important that once young adults jump through the hoops to acquire a job, they take that seriously, show up on time for work and interviews, and manage their money effectively. “It is really about building-up their financial knowledge,” he said and providing career development advice.

Andy Beem’s Love for Hang Gliding is Infectious

By Kiersten Vannest

In 1982, Andy Beem ran to the edge of a ledge and started to fly. Though he’d never done it before, the feeling was familiar, instinctive. He’d learned how to do this already, in his dreams. No engine, no propellers, just the sound of the wind blowing through his hair and over his wings. This was Andy’s first time hang gliding.

In the mid-1940s, a man named Francis Rogallo wondered what it would be like to drive out to the edge of town, unfurl a wing, and fly over the countryside. He began developing some prototypes that would make aviation more accessible and commercially viable. In 1948, made from recycled kitchen curtains sewn by his wife, Gertrude, they had created a successful flexible wing and were awarded a patent in 1951 under the name “Flexible Kite.” Dismissed as a hobbyist activity and child’s play by major aviation engineers, Rogallo worked on his design on his own time.

Fast forward about a decade, and America was deep in the throes of a space race with Russia. Interest in space travel was increasingly growing, and both countries vied for the title of first in space and first on the moon. Enter Francis Rogallo.

Rogallo had figured out that by using

Minari Stands Tall as a Sentimental Story of the American Dream

By Morgan Rojas for cinemacy.com

Despite awards shows that miscategorize and claim otherwise (looking at you Golden Globes), Minari is an American film. The soul of its story is the textbook definition of the American Dream. Directed with heartfelt empathy by Lee Isaac Chung, Minari—now available to watch on A24’s virtual screening room—is an intimate story about expectation vs reality, and the calculated risks that some are forced to take when pinning the future and well-being of their family on nothing more than hope.

Minari, courtesy A24.

The old adage “grow where you’re planted” is a familiar one—it’s what Jacob (Steven Yeun) plans to do, with abundance. Having immigrated from Korea with his wife Monica (Yeri Han) and two young children, Anne (Noel Cho) and David (Alan Kim), Jacob and his family settle into the outskirts of a small Arkansas town, where he plans to start a farm. Jacob’s vision is to harvest and sell local Korean produce to small markets, and his DIY “can-do” attitude propels its rocky start.

Jacob views his newly acquired acres of land as his personal “Garden of Eden” and a ticket to generational success. However, his expectation of the farm’s promise vs the reality of it—which drains resources and money away from his family—is far from ideal. The family dynamic is put in flux as Jacob’s attention becomes predominately set on work, causing Monica to grow more isolated and resentful. To ease the tension, it’s decided that her mother Soonja (Yuh-jung Youn) will come from Korea to live with them and help raise the children, much to David’s initial detest.

Where Minari really finds its emotional weight is the time we spend with the family and their home life, specifically the relationship between David and his grandma. Faced with so many life changes, cultural and otherwise, David isn’t mature enough to articulate his feelings, so he ends up taking his frustrations out on Soonja via cheeky pranks. It’s a familiar story of testing boundaries and the way Lee Isaac Chung captures David’s spitfire precociousness and childhood innocence feels extremely personal. From there, the film builds and swirls with emotional tension, coming to a crescendo on the night an accidental fire breaks out and threatens everything Jacob has worked so hard for. It’s in this moment when he has an epiphany:

is “financial success” worth more than his well-being and safety, or has greed been masquerading as his relentless work ethic?

Like the Minari, or crops of any kind, Lee Isaac Chung uses this beautiful cinematic vessel to show us that we grow where we’re planted; we can flourish anywhere so long as we nurture ourselves. This sentiment is the thesis statement of Minari, embracing cultural differences is the only way to create a richly symbiotic tapestry of American life. Now, someone tell that to the HFPA. •

In the Summer of 2018, Fenton was preparing to participate in his first Ironman competition, which was around the time he became the executive director of the LifeSkills program. He was able to secure funding for the program, brand the entity, and develop what he called “the five pillars” of the program, which are “Integrity, well-being, time management and goal setting, personal finance, and career development.”

Fenton said he estimates that the program has impacted the lives of more than 300 young adults who participate in what is typically a five-week, two-hour program. Currently, Fenton said, there are about 25 enrollees in the program, who are advised by five mentors, who follow-up with the participants later to keep them engaged in what they are learning.

Fenton also supports the local Red Cross, partnering for the installation of fire alarms, and drumming-up blood donations.

So how does one go from receiving an educational certificate from the American Musical and Dramatic Academy and a bachelor’s degree from the International College of Christian Ministries to becoming a private banker? “I have no idea,” he said, pondering the answer to that question. “They say better lucky than good. I have had a blessed life in that regard.” After the 2001 financial crisis, Fenton said he was introduced to a player in the financial industry and began seeking his career pathway. Fenton said he had a little background in the field of finance, working in the 1990s, but did not have the educational background in the industry.

“It is very rare,” he said, “to have a private banker without a formal education...most of them have MBA’s” or other impressive letters of the alphabet embossed on their business cards.

Jim was born in Oswego, New York, and spent his youth moving about the East-Coast with his family. His Dad was “good at fixing-up retail stores,” so the family moved around quite a bit following his father’s work opportunities.

Now that he is firmly ensconced in relatively compact El Segundo, like many residents, he cherishes the fact that his kids could walk to school and walk to the local ballfield. He also noted the strong parental involvement in local activities as a selling point for the town. And, as a triathlete, the proximity to the Pacific Ocean doesn’t hurt.

Fenton competed in his first triathlon in 2017. He went down that path because he had broken his foot while running at the high school track, so to get exercise, he took to riding his bike and swimming at the Plunge. When he told his wife he was training to participate in a “Half Ironman” competition, she apparently quipped, “half Ironman? Sounds like half-a-man,” wife Donna said. So, Fenton decided to use that comment to motivate him to train to participate in a full Ironman competition, which he did for the first time in 2018, in Madison, Wisconsin.

Jim Fenton

Brother Sean Fenton, the oldest of six siblings, related how Jim has served as an inspiration to him; a couple of years ago, when Jim announced that he was going to participate in the Madison Ironman competition, Sean said he made plans to travel from his North Carolina home to Wisconsin to support his brothers blossoming athletic endeavors.

“It was a spectacular experience that I had with my brother,” Sean said. Sean said he was a bit leery when Jim announced his Ironman participation plans. “I was so astounded,” Sean related, who admitted that he didn’t have a clue to what the Ironman competition entailed. “There was no way that I was going to miss this.”

After watching Jim complete the grueling Ironman competition, Sean said he was so overwhelmed and inspired that he decided to begin training to compete in Ironman festivities and hopes to join Jim this December at the La Quinta, California competition, dubbed the “70.3” because the miles traversed are one-half of the miles Ironman’s 140+ miles that participants endure.

Of course, currently, a COVID effect question must be asked. Fenton said he tested positive for COVID but was fortunate only to have what he termed “mild symptoms” for two weeks. He said that the biggest impact on the Fenton’s of the virus was that youngest son Jack; currently, a freshman at El Segundo High School has not been able to attend class in person, calling remote learning “very challenging.” Jim Fenton noted the expanded screen-time currently facing students, with the subsequent extreme diminishment of social interaction for students. “As an incoming freshman,” Fenton said, “he misses that experience of being in high school with his friends. We are proponents of getting the kids back in the classroom as much as possible when the state guidelines are met. Let’s go!” he said, about the return to the classrooms.

So now you know a little about Jim Fenton and family: Relocating from North Carolina, the state made famous by the fictional town of Mayberry, to the town many refer to as the West Coast Mayberry by the sea. North Carolina’s loss has turned out to be El Segundo’s gain. •

LA Host Committee Unveils Its Logo for Super Bowl LVI at SoFi Stadium

LA, get ready to host Super Bowl LVI next year. Los Angeles hosted the first Super Bowl in 1967, with the event later returning to the Rose Bowl in 1993. RELATIONSHIPS

Working together for the common good. Building bridges, not barriers. Striving to make things better. Finding a middle ground. These are all great ideals to strive for and to which we can agree upon. As we know, the good things in life are sometimes hard to accomplish or realize. It takes two to have a relationship. Both parties contribute and participate, like it or not. There can be so many things that separate us, things that come between us. The ways we interact with others can be determined by our looks, by our acts, and especially by our words. If we only relate to those who like us or look like us, then our pool of friends is rather shallow. I know during this Covid time it’s hard to go out of our way to reach out and speak to someone we meet in passing. When we do reach out, I believe that those gestures of respect, that acknowledgement of the other person, that simple smile or greeting, is what brings us together. If we overcome our hesitations of not wanting to invade someone else’s space or be rejected for being the weirdo who actually speaks to strangers, then life would be better for all. We can knock some of those man made barriers down. God created all of us in His image. All of us are in this thing together. I may look like an old, white haired, geezer who tries to look nice and be friendly, but I may just come off like an old, grump. No matter how we look, how we dress, whether we speak the same language, or smell like we haven’t had a shower in awhile, we are all in this thing called life together. If we start with our relationship with God and realize what he has done for us, then our relationships with our spouse, our children, friends, neighbors and yes, even strangers can be different. We can treat them with respect, we can show that we care, we can greet them with a “good morning” and really mean it. We need one another, now more than ever. When all is said and done, our relationships mean everything. Don’t wait til some one is dead

South Bay Native Brings the Taste of Vietnam to the City of Lawndale

John Nguyen, always wanted his friends to try the many delicious dishes that Vietnam had to offer. But there was a lack of choices when it came to Vietnamese restaurants. So in 2003, John opened up Saigon Dish with that in mind. Saigon Dish would introduce those that were unfamiliar with Vietnamese food to all the wonderful things Vietnamese cuisine had to offer. They create traditional items using high quality beef, white meat chicken and the freshest ingredients. And fifteen years later, that idea is still going strong as they continue to bring Vietnamese cuisine to the South Bay. During these times, please support your local businesses. a paraglider (a combination of the words parachute and glider) instead of a parachute, spacecraft could be returned to earth more accurately and piloted to land on a runway instead of splashing into the ocean. Despite being dismissed before, scientists now took great interest in his work, and NASA began developing a program to implement the idea on their missions.

With the clock running down and both countries growing closer every day to a manned space flight, the U.S. decided to scratch Rogallo's wings under the pressure of time. The first few space flights were returned to earth using a parachute with a large margin of error on its splash landing.

By this time, though NASA didn't use his design, the idea of attaching this device to a person had spread rapidly. Names like sky surfing and sky sailing promised pilots a chance to glide through the air with their pair of wings, sans motor. In the late sixties, Moyes Delta Gliders, named for founder Bill Moyes, began manufacturing wings for direct to consumer consumption. Many companies followed, growing to over thirty manufacturers in the seventies.

Around 1982, Andy Beem's best friend in high school asked if he would accompany him and his father on a hang gliding trip as their "chase driver," meaning he would drive them to the top of the mountain and then drive down to meet them when they landed.

"When I would see them flying off the mountains," says Beem, "I thought 'oh that just looks so beautiful, so wonderful,' but there's no way I saw myself doing that." With a fear of heights, he couldn't imagine jumping off the edge of a mountain and gliding down to the bottom. One day, he was invited down to the Playa del Rey site, now the Dockweiler Beach site. Seeing pilots jump off the thirty-foot landing and fly seven feet off the ground for about a hundred yards, he saw his opportunity. For the thirty-eight years, he flew, perfecting his skills and building his confidence.

Andy Beem, CEO and Lead Instructor at Windsports hang gliding school.

Today, Andy teaches hang gliding lessons at Windsports located at Dockweiler State Beach. Every now and then, you can see Andy and a handful of students from all over the world gliding off the thirty-foot ledge and landing in the sand.

This location is ideal, he explains, because the wind coming off the ocean is smooth, with very little turbulence. That, paired with the soft landing, makes it a great place for beginners to learn the ropes. Another advantage, he says, is that the general public can see the flights. In most other situations, hang gliding takes place in the mountains or remote locations, so the average person doesn't get to see what it looks like. So riding down the bike path, there's a better chance that someone will see the short flight as he did in 1982 and decide to give it a try.

Beem has become friends with many of his former students, going with them on trips to hang glide in places like Yosemite, Yellowstone, and even Mexico. Though the sport isn't as trendy as it once was, Beem says that for every pilot that leaves the sport, a new one arrives. Over the years, it's maintained a firm level of interest and size of community.

"To this day, after thirty-eight years of flying, there's still nothing more fun than flying a hang glider," he says. It's this joy in the sport that he hopes to give to his students. Seeing the light go on in a beginner's eyes, he says, is really what keeps him teaching, and the joy of flying keeps him hang gliding.

"Most teachers that teach anything don't do it because they're trying to get richer and make a lot of money," says Beem, "they enjoy the process of teaching people." He says that nearly all of his students are really fun and enjoyable people to work with, and many eventually become good flying buddies. He describes the hang gliding community as a group of fabulous individuals with a lot of camaraderie.

Whether it's racing against time from landmark to landmark, flying through a vast valley, or just jumping safely down to the beach, Andy's life has revolved around hang gliding, and he wants everyone to try it. • to pay your respect. Have a cold one with your dad. Tell your old lady that you love her. Take your kid to the playground. We are only on this earth for a short time. The days that we enjoy together are gifts from God. Thanks for relating to me by reading my column. I wish that I could be there face to face with my 32ish loyal readers and ask how each of you are doing. I’m doing great, thanks for asking. My life is full of a lot of good things, family, grandkids, golf, work that I chose to do, church, fellowship, weekly breakfast with some old timers, and much too much to jam into a 24 hour day. Look for the good, reach out to someone today, enjoy life!

LENT

I left out Fat Tuesday, Ash Wednesday, and the season of Lent from the list of events or holidays that usually happen in the month of February. In the Christian church, this period of time is a time of reflection and deeper devotion, a time of meditation upon what Jesus has done for all of mankind, and a time of repentance. As our society pulls further away from our past values, virtues, the scriptures, and the church, the message of grace, forgiveness, love and salvation is needed to be preached and shared more than ever. The Supreme Court ruled that churches can conduct “in-person worship services” last week. I’m sure your pastor would love to see you return. Don’t wait til Easter. The vaccine is only 85% or less effective in protecting you from the virus. God is 100% effective in giving you life, eternal life.

Summary of Adoption of Ordinance 2211 Amending Section 2.12.010 of the Hawthorne Municipal Code ("HMC") Regarding Updating the Descriptions of Various Departments to Reflect the Current Composition.

Pursuant to Government Code section 36933(c), the following constitutes a summary of Ordinance No. 2207 which will be considered for adoption by the City Council at its regular meeting on February 23, 2021 at 6:00 p.m. Pursuant to California Government Code section 36933(c) (1), the City Council has previously directed the preparation and publication of a summary of Ordinance No. 2211 which clarifies when the City Seal may be used. Ordinance No. 2211 makes changes to section 2.12.010. This section has not been updated since 1974 and during the years subsequent to its last amendment, the City has undergone numerous reorganizations of its departments. This ordinance amends section 2.12.010 to reflect the current composition of departments and the titles of positions of the department heads. The City Council finds and determines that there is no possibility that the adoption of this Ordinance will have a significant effect on the environment. Accordingly, this Ordinance is not subject to the requirements of the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) pursuant to Sections 15061(b)(3) and 15378 of Division 6 of Title 14 of the California Code of Regulations A certified copy of the entirety of the text of Ordinance No. 2211 is available both on the City's website and also in the office of the City Clerk, 4455 West 126th Street, Hawthorne, California, and is open for public inspection.
