Certified Arborist Santos Haro Cares for South Bay Trees

By Kiersten Vannest

Walking the streets of El Segundo, the city shines in shades of green, with saplings and decades-old trees alike lining every pathway and park. There are over six thousand trees in El Segundo and more than thirty species in this small ten-mile area. So who takes care of them all?

Santos Haro is one of two certified arborists working for the parks department in El Segundo. His work is dedicated totally to the forest of El Segundo. Whether it be an inspection, removal, trimming, or evaluation, his job is to help the citizens of El Segundo by ensuring the health of our trees.

To be a certified arborist is to know all things tree. One must keep up their certification by taking several educational units every year and pass a rigorous exam meant to test their knowledge. Asked if he could blindly identify any tree in the area, Haro says, “No problem.”

Originally from Culver City, Haro worked summers alongside his brother for his father’s landscaping business, which his father owned for over fifty years.

“I learned the trade from working with my dad,” says Haro, “but it wasn’t until I started working in a nursery that I started to familiarize myself with names of trees and plants.” Though his title is specifically with trees, he says that he wears many hats working in a parks department, so he also has a certified nursery license.

The majority of trees seen throughout El Segundo are planted through the parks department. When a new tree needs to go up, Haro is called. He discusses with his fellow arborist, Christopher Hentzen, and goes out to evaluate the space. What type of tree recommendation he gives is by and large decided by the space and how that space will hold a mature tree.

Tree treatment and removal is another facet of his job helping the community. When a tree is aging, sick, or needs to come down, he gets the call. He makes his evaluation, and then his team, Eduardo Franco and Eduardo Alcala take care of it. So what does an aging or sick tree look like?

According to Haro, aging could look like branch dieback. Starting at the ends and working inward, the branches begin to wither away. It could look like cankers or conks, a type of fungus that can appear on the outside but grow throughout the inside of the tree. The trunk could begin to crack, or the bark will start peeling. This is true of any tree allowed to reach old age. Significant leaf discoloration or shedding could be a sign your tree is sick, as well as cracks, fallen branches, stunted growth, and fungus.

If you notice any of these signs in your tree, Haro suggests you give the parks department a call. The disease can spread to other trees, and aging trees can potentially be a hazard. Whether treatment or removal is necessary, he will come to inspect the tree and give a definitive answer on a recommended course of action.

Some of the tree species specific to El Segundo that he sees significant problems

Santos Haro with are Liquidambar, Ficus, and Magnolia. This is due to their aggressive root systems, which he says become a problem, especially if the tree is under-watered.

“A lot of times people think that lawn irrigation is enough water for their tree, which in reality, it isn’t,” he explains. During the spring and summer, a tree should be watered about twice a week with fifteen gallons of water. During the fall and winter, this could be cut down to once per week, but still at fifteen gallons.

“Trees are opportunistic,” he says, describing how they will find water any way they can. This means that watering a tree the same way you water your lawn means the tree will stay within the top twelve inches

‘Street Gang: How We Got to Sesame Street’ Review: What the TV Taught

By Ryan Rojas for cinemacy.com

Big Bird, Bert & Ernie, Kermit the Frog and Cookie Monster are as timeless today as they were when they debuted on “Sesame Street” in 1969. But what I didn’t know about these lovable muppets was the incredible story behind the seminal children’s TV show’s creation, which the new documentary Street Gang: How We Got to Sesame Street reveals. The road that was taken by televi-air, Cooney shares how she worked with the Federal Government’s Office of Education to create the “Children’s TV Workshop,” a group of educators and TV producers that would create an entirely new style of children’s educational show.

The biggest debt that Street Gang wishes to pay here is to Jon Stone, who we learn was the visionary and central force for what “Sesame Street” the show would become. Motivated sion producers and educators to create this one-of-a-kind children’s program was radical, as they set out to create an education show that would answer: what if a show loved kids instead of sold to them? Could TV help kids? Could it be used to teach?

This became “Sesame Street,” which changed the culture and has been cherished by children still to this day. Whether you do or don’t know much about the show, Street Gang: How We Got to Sesame Street (based on the New York Times Bestselling Novel) should be required watching to see how art and altruism can go together to change the world for the better.

At 1 hour and 47 minutes, Street Gang centers around the radical reason of why the show was created: as a way to help teach basic education skills such as reading and counting to impoverished inner-city Black and minority children at a time when nothing like it had been done. It was a daring notion, and the doc introduces the main people behind the show’s development such as Joan Cooney. The female television producer who was responsible for putting the show on the

by the disillusionment that the Vietnam War placed on the country, as well as a disgusted response to overt consumerism in children’s TV shows, Stone was not only responsible for pioneering “Sesame Street”’s mix of education and entertainment, but for its daring decision to set the show in a gritty New York street environment (versus a fantasyland or suburban setting which was more popular), with the

Fraud Watch: Avoiding COVID-19 Related Medicare Scams

(BPT) - Medicare fraud is not a new issue and long predates the pandemic, but during times of crisis, scammers often get more aggressive and creative with targeting seniors. Scammers have taken ample advantage of the COVID-19 pandemic by offering Medicare beneficiaries fraudulent services, resources, or information about the vaccine in exchange for payment or their Medicare number and other personal information. Now, like always, guard your Medicare card.

The Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) is warning the public to be on the lookout for scammers using the COVID-19 pandemic and vaccine distribution as an opportunity to steal the personal information of seniors and exploit their Medicare benefits. Medicare covers the COVID-19 vaccine, so there will be no cost to you. If anyone asks you to share your Medicare number or pay for access to the vaccine, you can bet it’s a scam.

Alongside false vaccine offers, scammers may attempt to steal your information by soliciting other types of services. These may include offers of “paid” clinical research trials, COVID-19 “cures,” additional medical testing such as genetic testing, procedures, or free medical equipment like test kits, masks, or back braces.

While scammers have become increasingly sophisticated, the good news is that you have the power to shut them down and protect yourself. Safeguard your Medicare number and help prevent fraud by following these easy tips:

- Guard your Medicare number just like your Social Security card and credit card. Only share your Medicare number with trusted health care providers, or verified COVID-19 vaccine administrators. The COVID-19 vaccine cost is covered by Medicare, but Medicare will never call, text, email, or contact you through

To protect yourself from Medicare fraud, it’s important to understand how fraud happens so you can recognize the signs and know what steps to take to protect yourself.

Fraudsters use various methods to approach Medicare beneficiaries. They may contact or target you through unsolicited emails, calls, texts, social media, or websites. In their outreach, they may claim to be from a medical office, insurance company, or may even impersonate a government official. It is important to note that some legitimate vaccine centers or administrators may reach out asking you to verify your Medicare number.

While actual scams may vary, there are some common themes. Scammers may claim that you can pay to put your name on a waitlist for the vaccine or pay for special access to the vaccine. Then, they may claim that they can provide these services in exchange for personal or financial information, like your Medicare number. Just remember, there is no cost for the vaccine; you do not have to pay for the vaccine itself, nor do you have to pay to get on a waitlist to get the vaccine.

social media asking for your Medicare number.

- Contact your local health department for more information about vaccines in your area. Each state has its own plan for how and when residents can get vaccines. You can also visit CDC.gov for information on vaccine distribution in your state, and for answers to common vaccine questions.

- Review your Medicare statements for accuracy. Watch for any services billed to your Medicare number that you don’t recognize and ask questions if something seems incorrect.

Spotting and reporting Medicare fraud is critical to protecting yourself and your neighbors. And don’t forget: there is no cost for the vaccine, so you should never have to pay for the shot itself or to get on a waitlist. When you do see a trusted health care provider or verified COVID-19 vaccine administrator, bring your red, white, and blue Medicare card or Medicare Number so your health care provider or pharmacy can bill Medicare. If you can’t find it, you can also view your Medicare Number or print your Medicare card from your online Medicare account, or call us at 1-800-MEDICARE. •

Huber's Hiccups

News for the City of Good Neighbors from an Old Guy named Norb Huber

AGE, FRIENDS, AFTER LIFE AND ALL OF THAT STUFF

I turned 66 this past Saturday and I had over 220 "FB friends" wish me a happy birthday. Do I know all of these "so called friends"? No, but it is nice to receive so many greetings. Age is just a number. Do I feel old? No. Our bodies tell us how old we are. Every day we decide our age by how we feel. Some days I feel all of 66, on other days I feel and act 33 years young. Do I feel like I'm "over the hill"? No. For some of us, we are afraid of growing old. We don't ever want to face the day when we cannot drive a car, or the day we cannot live independently any longer. Ultimately, we are afraid of death. No matter how strong our faith is, death has a certain uncertainty to it. Yes, I know for certain that I will in heaven with my Lord and Savior when I die. Even with that certainty, this earthly life is all that we have known, transitioning to an after life is some thing new and different. We all have attended a funeral and death strikes us as being so very final. Our loved one is here one day and then the very next day, gone. We say to ourselves that we will never have the opportunity to talk or laugh or hug one another again in this life. We leave the funeral with this feeling that life is so short. We leave saying that we want to value every day, every activity, or every opportunity to love each other before it's too late. When playing golf, we take it "one shot at a time". The same is true in life, we have to take each day, one day at a time. I really don't know when this column is going to die. Maybe it will be sudden, I will just stop writing. Maybe this junk will slowly die off. Maybe I will run out of new topics to write about. Who knows? I take this stuff, one column at a time. We can be certain that God knows the future. He knows how much time we have left. He knows when I should stop writing this rumbling. All I know is that life goes a lot smoother when we put our trust in God, we relax, and we enjoy having a cold drink. My dear loyal readers, I wish I could press a button and have all of our problems disappear. I wish I could call up my mom who is in heaven and tell her how much I love her on Mothers Day. Life goes on. We are called to live today and love those around us. Don't miss out friends. Don't miss the opportunity to give your love away today. Tomorrow might be too late.

intent to relate to the Black and minority kids that they wished to connect with.

There were multiple moments throughout Street Gang: How We Got to Sesame Street in which I was emotionally affected. Whether it was me genuinely laughing over brilliant puppeteering skits (at one point in time in entertainment, the only two shows on air that had comedy writers were “The Tonight Show with Johnny Carson” and “Sesame Street”), or politically enlightened, or emotionally moved, the doc spans a wide emotional range. Seeing then-musical composer Joe Raposo—who wrote the show’s original songs and music—reminisce over writing Kermit’s famous ballad “It’s Not Easy Being Green,” or seeing special guest star Jesse Jackson get a huge set full of kids to chant “I am somebody, I can change the world” made my eyes water. Beyond its bold artistic achievements, Street Gang also serves as a love letter and reminder to artists and educators everywhere, that with fearless creativity and a good heart, you can create something that can change the world.

of soil, potentially causing tripping hazards and sidewalk damage, and it won't be anchored as well. Giving a tree adequate water encourages the roots to grow down instead of out. Every tree, says Haro, has a kind of shine to it. If the leaves appear dull or less shiny, it's usually an indication that the tree needs more water.

Another area under his purview is Memory Row, a section of El Segundo where trees may be purchased to honor lost loved ones through the parks department and cared for by Haro himself.

Haro keeps in his yard a garden oasis at his own home, plentiful with flowers and trees and plants. "I love working in the yard," says Haro, "Good therapy. You feel a sense of calm when you work in your yard."

If you have questions regarding a tree on your property or anywhere in the city, the parks department can help. Trees are an integral part of El Segundo, thanks to its certified arborists and their hardworking teams. "The Parks Department takes great pride in the care of their trees, as much as the residents love having their trees." •
