JohnJohn McLellan Charts a Course to Pro Racing

By Duane Plank

Folks of a certain age may remember a cartoon that filled the TV airwaves on Saturday mornings for a while back in the mid-60s, called Speed Racer. My research divulged that the Speed Racer was a character developed by a man by the name of Tatsuo Toshida and aimed to tell the story, in animated form, of “the adventures of an ambitious young man, who soon became a professional racer.”

Well, nine-year-old JohnJohn McLellan is following that pathway, but in real-time and real-life. When I interviewed his father, John McLellan, to get background information on his dynamic son, he was preparing to travel to Bakersfield for a weekend of racing. And this was just a few days after the McClellan’s had returned from Mexico, where JohnJohn had recently competed.

The elder McClellan is the principal of JWM CPA & Company and was raised in Torrance. He currently lives in Redondo Beach, and his CPA firm has an office in Manhattan Beach. McLellan has a background in motocross and, back in the day, raced at the long-ago shuttered Ascot Park near Gardena and layouts at the Indian Dunes Motocross Park and Saddleback Park.

With his background in motocross, it was natural that he would introduce his son JohnJohn to the world of motocross. JohnJohn took to the sport at the age of five but suffered an injury while riding the dirt bike, breaking his collarbone and leg. His Mom, JoJo, who, like all mothers, was beside herself when young JohnJohn was injured and carted off to the hospital, decided that riding dirt bikes was not the best idea for her son, so she pointed him in the direction of go-kart racing, which she deemed safer.

After the young McLellan, who also played baseball and soccer, recovered from his injuries, COVID hit the world. Youth sports shutdown and schooling was attempted via ZOOM on the computer. So, the McLellans started taking their son to a track in Riverside County, Adams Motorsports Park, a couple of times a week to develop his karting skills.

Troy Adams is McLellan’s coach and mentor and has worked with JohnJohn for three years. Asked what makes JohnJohn unique, Adams said that “other than being a hard-headed kid like most kids,” Adams chuckled, “he works hard. His [parents] are all in regarding his racing program. His Mom, JoJo, is a true asset.”

Tiny Bites of a Big Apple

Article and photos by Ben & Glinda Shipley

We’ve always been a little baffled by native New Yorkers—specifically, by how much they cling to “The City” (as they call it) and how they can only stand to leave for the briefest of vacations. If we complain about tall buildings, crime, getting lost, or litter on the streets, they’ll shrug with their deepest sympathies for our country-bumpkin limitations. To paraphrase a raft of local crooners: If you can make it here, you can make it anywhere (and if you can’t, don’t let the door hit you on the way out).

We long ago lost count of how many times we’ve traveled to New York, so that might qualify as some sort of endorsement.

We’ve visited the city poor, prosperous, and on expense accounts—and of the three, definitely prefer prosperous. The expense account dinners never hurt, but after a day of wading through the crowds and traffic to your next round of New York-style haggling, it takes an effort to dial up the enthusiasm for a night on the town. And poor speaks for itself in a place with this kind of hustle and weather.

One thing we learned long ago was to never try to swallow the city in one massive gulp. In London or Paris, we aim on every trip to get to the essence of the community, but in New York, we settle for one random bite of the apple at a time. We don’t have a favorite neighborhood or borough, and

Vortex Meditates on Dementia and Dreams

By Ryan Rojas, Cinemacy.com

The idea of control—or more specifically, the helpless feeling of not having it—is something that consumes the mind of writer-director-provocateur, Gaspar Noé. Whether he's interested in the loss of control of our bodies (Irreversible), our minds (Enter the Void, Climax), or romantic partners (Love), his films are intent on presenting suffering in its starkest, bleakest of forms. And we, as the audience, must endure this too as a type by telling the story of a dementia-stricken couple living out the final days of their life together. While you won't find any hints of gleefully-deranged hallucinogenic dance parties in this somber, sober, and incredibly moving film, it remains impactful.

In Vortex, we follow an elderly couple living in a cramped French apartment. Sharing a single frame together (an important note for now), they venture to share a meal on the balcony. Elle (Françoise Lebrun) asks him, "Life is a dream, isn't it?" To which Lui (Dario Argento) agrees: "A dream within a dream." And then, this painful dream begins.

of pain-based stamina test, a demented joy ride one is forced to take to see if there's any light at the end of the tunnel. Is there any grander meaning to it after living through such cruel nightmares?

While Noé is well known for being deliberately demented in his pop-shock presentations (seizure-inducing strobe lights are a signature), his latest film—Vortex—is perhaps his most unexpected yet. While it fits within his body of work, Vortex meditates on suffering

We next see them in bed from a bird's eye view. Elle awakes in a sort of silent early morning panic. Heartbreakingly, the frame divides them both into their own frames—to which they will remain throughout the rest of the film. In a visually experimental move, Noé presents the rest of the film in split-screen narrative. We must follow Lui and Elle's lives, played out in real-time sequences lasting for impressively long stretches, from

Isabel and Her Colores Go to School by Alexandra Alessandri

By Kristen Morell, Librarian

Isabel is the new kid at school and just like many children she is nervous for her first day. Isabel is new to the English language and is worried it will mean she cannot make friends at her new school. She is comfortable with the warm pinks and blues, of her native language, Spanish. She is not a fan of the cool blustery blues of English and is not excited about having to learn a new language. Isabel's mother assures her it is okay to be scared and shares some words of encouragement, "Al mal tiempo, buena cara" or to bad times, a good face. Isabel keeps this phrase in mind throughout the day as new experiences bring new challenges.

Isabel is confused by her teacher's instructions for their first activity of the day; however, she quickly understands by copying the motions of her classmates. Throughout the day, she meets new friends and overcomes new challenges with her mother's words of encouragement in mind. She even begins sharing some Spanish words with her friends. Her confidence growing throughout the book is very positive and encouraging for children who may also be struggling with starting a new school or even learning a new language. This book is bilingual with passages in English and Spanish which makes it a great read for a wide audience. More bi-lingual picture books are available next to our board books and kit sections in the youth area.

Your Neighborhood Therapist

Dear Neighborhood Therapist,

There are times when anxiety rains down on me like a sudden storm. My personal life is fine, but I fret a lot about the state of the world and our country, and what it will be like for my kids and future generations. I sometimes feel like this is all my friends and I talk about. It's helpful to talk about, but only for short periods of time, and then I start to worry again. It feels like I can't ever get the anxiety to go completely away, and I'm finding it's getting in the way of other things that I want to do and bringing my friends down as well. Is there something I can do to feel better?

— Am I Too Worried? El Segundo

Dear Too Worried,

If you are feeling dire about the state of the world, I suspect you'll feel a lot better by taking action to help the world than you will by simply trying to make the feeling go away.

Find something that is helpful to others that you also find enjoyable or satisfying - even if it's not the absolute most helpful or important thing you can possibly think of - and do that. Nobody can do everything, or be good at everything, or fix everything, so it is really a case of, "Don't just stand there! Do something!" That thing you do doesn't have to be perfect (remember it's not your job to fix the world alone) it just needs to be doing more good than harm.

Mindfulness, yoga, therapy, and meditation all have their benefits, but they are not the solution to the problems we have. The answer to having less anxiety in the world isn't training more therapists; it's doing fewer things that cause anxiety. It's making the lives of everyone around us better. It's making sure we are connected with the people around us. If we want to improve mental health, let's start with the world we live in.

Generally, when people worry about getting sick and having to miss work, or missing the once per hour bus, or getting an unpayable medical bill, or living paycheck to paycheck, or if they have to hug their children extra hard before dropping them off at school because maybe their number will come up today, they feel pretty bad.

Feeling bad doesn't mean you need to "work on yourself," or even work not to feel bad. It usually means you need the things that are making you feel bad to stop. Before we assume there is a "mental health" problem, we should always check first for "mental injury."

Take some time and figure out what action is reasonable to take, and then go for it, and help put me out of a job. I'd be just as happy playing shortstop for the Dodgers or guiding tours in Tuscany, especially if it's because we've made our world better for everyone.

We soon see the early stages of Elle’s dementia. Taking out the trash becomes an impromptu trip into a street shop. As we see her wander through the streets, all with a look that conveys vacancy and innocence, Lui continues readying himself for the day, unaware of her whereabouts. When he finally realizes she’s gone and finds her, he confronts her with concerned interrogation, her blank face unable to provide answers. As her condition worsens, he remains steadfast in his devotion to her. Or is it that he doesn’t wish to acknowledge this new reality—this dream within a dream? This becomes their shared downfall.

At 2 hours and 22 minutes, Vortex is a gripping watch. The longer the story heightens with suspense, the more I was racked with urgency. The film would not succeed without its brilliant actors who inhabit every second of the film, delivering some of the most naturalistic performances. I’m still in awe as I write and think back about how Lebrun, as Elle, is able to convey this specific mind state, with that blank but warm stare on her face. And Argento (who cinephiles will recognize as the director of Suspiria) delivers as equally a realistic performance.

Sadly, we all recognize that aging and its ailments are a natural part of life. Some would be so lucky to live as long a life as to experience them. But the matter stands, that the inevitable decline of our bodies—these precious, fragile and temporary little vessels—will break down, leaving us physically trapped, helpless, and without control. In Vortex—as Noé shows—if we’re lucky enough, it’s a dream we might not have to dream alone.

JohnJohn McLellan

JohnJohn has now been karting for about a year-and-a-half. He started in what is termed “kid-karting,” which, his father said, involves youth competitions from age five to seven/eight. Once the competitors “age out,” they move on to the next level of racing, the cadet class, involving racers up to the age of twelve. JohnJohn has been phenomenally successful on the track, placing in the top third, making the podium in most of his races while seizing multiple first-place finishes.

The elder McLellan, schooling this scribe, mentioned diverse types of kart racing, including dirt, enduro, and sprint. JohnJohn typically participates in the sprints, which range from 12-16 laps, with laps clocking at under a minute, with the young racers “going as fast as they can,” with no pit stops or refueling stops. The young competitors can challenge the speedometer “about 65-miles an hour.” A lot of things happen really fast,” John said.

JohnJohn has much higher aspirations than racing against kids a little older than him. Like racing on the Formula One circuit. My understanding is that, if JohnJohn continues to be a rising on-track star, his next step would be to elevate to Formula Three racing in about a half-dozen years and then follow in the footsteps of his pro racing idols and ascend to Formula One.

He is currently competitively racing in two kid kart series, as well as competing internationally. His recent competitions in Mexico, where all the top-age-group drivers in Latin America competed, were great experiences for JohnJohn, whose Dad said that the competitors South of the Border are “a little more aggressive than they are in America,” noting that JohnJohn “crashed-out” in a recent foray. Undeterred, the McLellan team is scheduled to return to Mexico to tally up some more miles on the kart, maybe make it to the podium, later this month.

JoJo Walker, JohnJohn’s Mom, remembered his motorbike accident, which took place in San Diego and resulted in a broken collarbone and leg. “Not sure I want to do this” she remembers thinking about motorbike racing. “Maybe we can put him in something a little closer to the ground.”

JohnJohn had visited the Riverside track and been introduced to go-karts, and Walker thought that after seeing her son “put in an ambulance, and the trauma team waiting for him” at the local children’s hospital, that kart racing might be a better avenue for her son to show his competitive spirit.

At the Riverside track, JohnJohn started his training. “At first, he was a bit slow,” JoJo said, “but within a few days, he got really, really fast.” As racing competitions started again in the late summer of 2020, “he was ready to go,” with JohnJohn placing second in his first race.

As for the trip to race in Bakersfield, Walker said that her son “[nailed] it, he got second. The kid who [finished] first is thirteen, and it was his home track. John did really awesome,” putting up good timing numbers, all in an unfamiliar go-kart. “We are very proud of him, to get in a different kart and still [nailed] it,” JoJo said, noting how the cart JohnJohn raced in Bakersfield required him to finesse the turns, and use his acquired racing skills, all a lot to bring to the table for a nine-year-old.

“He was able to get in the kart up there and give them a run for their money,” Walker said, noting how the young McLellan was competing against kids as old as thirteen, in a different vehicle, at a track with which he is not that familiar. “He [showed] really good driving skills,” his proud Mom said while mentioning that JohnJohn has had to familiarize himself with different karts while racing locally, in Mexico, and in Central California.

So, you have read what the adults in the room have to say about the budding racer.

Now we will hear from JohnJohn himself: Reporter: “Did you have fun in Bakersfield?” JohnJohn: “Yes.” Reporter: “Was that the first time that you had raced out of the country when you raced in Mexico?” JohnJohn: “Yes.” Reporter: “What happened when you were injured cycling?” JohnJohn: “When I was motorcycling, my throttle got stuck, and I went under a truck” that was parked extremely near to the track, which is when JohnJohn sustained his injuries that led him to, after healing up, pursue kart racing.

JohnJohn said after he recuperated, it was decided his motorbiking days were in the rear-view mirror, at least competitively. He said he likes racing because it allows him to “be challenged. Once somebody passes you, you just want to pass them back. Then it keeps happening, and it starts getting fun.”

The young McLellan hopes to have Formula One racing in his future, noting those racers pilot “really fast cars, on a lot of fun tracks,”

we've never settled on a favorite hotel. We've never even kept a list of restaurants—they just go out of business anyway—so cuisine is a matter of firsthand exploration and following the localish crowds.

In that random spirit, here is an unsystematic handful of experiences to ponder:

Spanish Harlem:

Ben's first night, both in America and in New York, took him at age seventeen to a hippie commune on 134th Street. Tie-dye, black lights, long, stringy hair, Mothers of Invention on the record player and vacant stares. Within fifteen minutes, he was walking (after midnight no less) to the subway at Lexington in the old corduroy suit, green shirt, and blue tie with Dad's bomb-proof Samsonite. Welcome to America, young man. A night on the benches at La Guardia Airport never looked so good.

TriBeCa:

One bitterly cold January evening, we came out of the Tribeca subway into deep snowdrifts and stumbled onto Ideya. This tiny Jamaican treasure had opened just days before, so we snagged a window table to keep tabs on the blizzard over too many of their signature mojitos. Like so many New York gems, Ideya took off like a rocket and then, within a decade, crashed and burned. The point not being to recommend a particular restaurant, but to note how fabulous finds like this come and go all the time. You'll quickly find your own.

Basketball:

The pickup games at the neighborhood courts can feature some sensational play. Up against the fence, you hear every squeak, grunt, and grumble and watch the streams of blood, sweat, and saliva fly off into the night. It might be unfair, but we picture these violent, hyper-athletic dudes failing one too many drug tests on their way into the NBA. They're that good.

The Plaza:

The Oak Room and the Palm Court used to be two of our favorite eateries in town, but then the Plaza lost its way, and the Oak Room (literally) closed down for bad behavior. One indelible memory: In the 20th century, the air in New York had always struck us as a polluted mess. But then, after we'd been living in Southern California for a few years, we woke up one morning at the Plaza and went for a walk. Something was off, and we couldn't quite figure it out—but then realized we were walking in a major US city and breathing fresh air. Such a shock.

The Theater:

One reason we don't mind traveling to Manhattan with other people is that Glinda can't get enough of the theater. Ben, on the other hand, would rather wander the streets of Midtown and its gaudy, degenerate theater of the absurd. With friends to keep Glinda company, everyone comes away satisfied.

Washington Square:

One of the most relaxed places to hang out in any city anywhere (but bring your own coffee). In the 1940s, friends of ours, Serbian refugees from the Nazis, rented the penthouse in one of the apartment buildings here for the then outrageous sum of $350 per month. Thanks to New York rent controls, their daughter is shelling out the same sum today.

The Algonquin:

We need to get back here. One of the few examples of a renovation taking a historic hotel—that used to have the most cramped rooms in the city—back to its roots as a comfortable haven for writers and artistes like Dorothy Parker, places in town where you can sit down, relax, and wait for life to come to you.

Coney Island:

After a thirty-year absence, we expected a rundown, dilapidated mess. But on a warm-ish February afternoon, the only inhabitants were old geezers reading their newspapers on the neat benches next to the immaculate, but closed, concessions. We came here for the one and only Nathan's Coney Island and did not leave disappointed—the hot dogs were as delicious and unhealthy as ever.

Brighton:

We turned a corner here one afternoon and came upon a dude unloading crates of vodka

She awaits your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to be free.

Robert Benchley, and Heywood Broun. A remarkably affordable hideaway, especially today and especially for Midtown.

The Islands:

Our ancestors came in through Charleston, South Carolina, so we've never really connected with the Ellis Island narrative, important though it was. The Statue of Liberty is another matter, but so much larger and more solid than it looks in the photographs. Those French do know how to cast an iconic—and hopefully eternal—green copper statue.

The Circle Line:

One thing we try to do on every trip is take the cruise around Manhattan. A side of the city you'll never see otherwise (several sides actually, all the way from majestic to gritty, to historic, to truly bucolic). One of the few up a small stairway into a darkened function room. When we inquired, he reminded us in a thick Russian accent that it was Valentine's Day. When we asked if we could crash his private party, he took $140 from us and told us to show up at 10:30PM. We did, and found that the Russian underworld was alive and well in New York. A fabulous buffet—caviar, blinis, lobster, shrimp, ten kinds of salmon—but the main event was the mobsters in their tuxedos and shoulder bulges and the millions of dollars of bling on their gorgeous, shimmering molls. We were deciding what to drink, when the waiter strode up and dropped off a fifth of vodka and two glasses. Needless to say, we didn't even think about a selfie. The dancing lasted until the sun came up the next morning. •

The tourist business is alive and well on Times Square.
