From the Baseball Diamond to the MMA: The Tale of the Boyce Twins

By Duane Plank

I consider myself a mainstream sports guy—baseball, football, hockey, golf, etc. But I am slow to catch on when a newer sport invades the airwaves.

Time to get educated on something new, like the Ultimate Fighting Championship [UFC] and the popular sport of mixed martial arts [MMA]. I was educated by El Segundo High School graduate Wyatt Boyce and his brother, Garrett, that UFC is the umbrella company, the biggest brand in the sport, which runs the actual sport of MMA. Wyatt likened it to the hierarchy of the National Football League. “Football is the sport,” he said, “the NFL is the organization.”

Both young men played baseball in high school and then enrolled in college to continue pursuing their dreams of a professional baseball career. But Wyatt, who attended West L.A. College and then Chico State University, tore his rotator cuff, said, “throwing a baseball became a real struggle, and over time turned me off to the sport.”

Wyatt played baseball and basketball in high school, deciding to focus specifically on baseball during his senior year as an Eagle. Post-graduation, Wyatt bounced around a few collegiate destinations. He attended Cal State Dominguez Hills, played at West Los Angeles College for a year, and ended-up pitching at Chico State University.

He said that many of his performances at Chico State were “rocky,” as he had trouble throwing strikes, as well as encountering “some issues” with the head coach. He then moved on to a small Christian school in Orange County, Vanguard University, during the COVID shutdown and pitched for one season.

He suffered his torn rotator cuff while at Vanguard, and while attempting rehab, he “kind of saw the writing on the wall” and became much more interested in following the exploits of the MMA athletes. “I still wanted to be an athlete, [finding] something else that I am passionate about” after hanging up his baseball spikes.

“I got into MMA in late 2020,” he said. His interest in so-called combat sports started with “just hitting pads at Rec Park, and after that, I decided to seriously pursue fighting. We began looking for a gym.”

Wiseburn Da Vinci Wolves Make CIF Finals

Need Help
Getting to Tournament

The Wiseburn Da Vinci girls’ varsity volleyball team made it to the CIF Southern Section Division 8 finals and qualified for the CIF State Division V Southern Regional Semifinals last fall, making history for the new charter school’s athletic program. The team went 10-0 to win the Mulholland League and had an overall record of 27-7 for the season. The team chemistry is what sets this wolfpack apart. The team doesn’t have much height, but they play with heart and are defensively solid. With only three graduated seniors, the returning lady wolves are hungry for more wins!

They made history for the school and the Varsity girls were invited to play in a tournament in Oahu August 16th - August 21st. Sacred Hearts Academy is hosting the tournament. The 16-team tournament will provide a great warm up as the girls enter the higher-level Pioneer league for the fall 2022 season. The coaches believe that this will be a life-changing experience for these student athletes. These girls are hard-working, passionate, and competitive on and off the court. Several of the athletes are looking to play collegiate volleyball at a Hawaiian university.

Elvis: A Wildly Operatic Bio Pic Fit For A King

By Ryan Rojas, Cinemacy.com

Where to watch: 'Elvis' is now playing in theaters nationwide.

The biggest thought I had while leaving the building after watching Elvis was, "Boy... that was a lot." Director Baz Luhrmann (Moulin Rouge!) succeeds in bringing the King of Rock and Roll's outlandish life story to the big screen in the most oversized, music-filled way imaginable. And yet, after being visually overloaded with this hyper-real staging of the rise-and-fall of Elvis Aaron Presley over 159 minutes, I also felt an unexpected solemnity. Surprisingly, an emotional connection had been forged with the man who, in real life, cauldron. We see that Elvis's story starts where The Colonel's begins: as a traveling circus leader promoting circus freaks and country singers through rural Americana. Always looking for the next attraction, he nearly dismisses a new Blues artist singing "That's All Right" on a nearby record player, until he learns with amazement: "He's whiiiite?" The potential opportunity for commercial success is instantly sparked, leading to chasing down his new fixation. After seeing young Elvis's (Austin Butler) power of possession to entrance the youth through his electrically arresting hip-shaking gyrations (which comically recalls 2001's early ape howls of new self-consciousness), he dangles a career died a parody of his former self, but who in this sensationally operatic version of a bio-pic remix is given new life in his depiction as a lonely but culture-changing star.

Beyond Elvis's singular style, the other key device that makes the film more than a traditional bio pic is the story that Luhrmann and Jeremy Doner choose to tell here (both also share screenplay credit with Sam Bromell and Craig Pearce). Elvis is not just the story of the Memphis-born singer only, but also that of his lifelong manipulative manager, Colonel Tom Parker, who many believe was largely responsible for not only Elvis's fall from grace, but even his premature death. A slippery snake oil salesman whose backstory is as unbelievable as his self-given suffix, "The Colonel" is here played by Tom Hanks (whose combination of prosthetics and ambiguously European accent result in something between Cristoph Waltz and Foghorn Leghorn).

The Colonel's gleefully mischievous narration that opens the film and pops up throughout feels like a dark wizard ominously stirring a to him like an evil genie. Young and naive and fueled by his love of music, Elvis agrees to The Colonel's proposal, and it's off to a future and relationship that would change the world.

Elvis is at its best and most captivating when it's not narratively bound. Baz Luhrmann's canvas is not one of realism, but expressionism. When the film wishes show how it might have felt experiencing Elvis's stardom at the time, it's electric. Going all the way back to seeing a Young Elvis (Chaydon Jay) wander into a Gospel-bumping tent and becoming possessed by the sweat-filled claps and shakes from the African American community, is heart-pounding. Hearing the distortion-laced electric guitar solo that accompanies Elvis's first dance moves, is gripping. And living through Elvis's final years, playing out a Vegas residency that would become his elephant's graveyard, is heartbreaking to watch him shut away in that hotel.

Austin Butler as Elvis is not just good. He very well might have been born to play Elvis in a big screen movie. What's beyond

Have You Ever Seen a Flower by Shawn Harris and Trillions of Trees by Kurt Cyrus

By Kristina Kora-Beckman, Senior Librarian, El Segundo Public Library

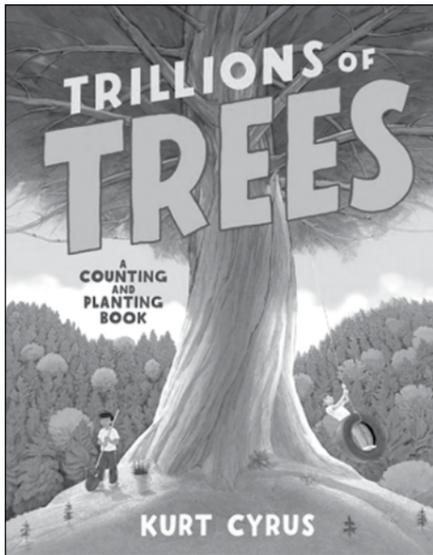

This week, I'm reviewing two nature related picture books that fit into our summer reading theme, Read Beyond the Beaten Path. Shawn Harris' Have You Ever Seen a Flower is a gorgeous, lyrical exploration of experiencing nature with all five senses. The story depicts a young girl and her dog as they leave a drab, black and white urban area to investigate a boldly bright field of flowers. The text also follows imaginative paths, asking questions and inviting readers to engage with nature and our relationship with it. I loved the exuberance in the dreamy illustrations and the flow of language, which felt almost poem-like.

In comparison, the pictures in Kurt Cyrus' Trillions of Trees, are very detailed, and realistic while the rhyming story explores the hilariously fantastic result of a tree order mixup. Trees go everywhere including county parks, orchards, windbreaks, and healing a hillside scarred from a forest fire burn. During the journey, readers learn about all the different ways trees can be used in our urban and rural environments and the benefits that they provide. I loved the playful learning and creative ways Cyrus imparts facts with

Burden of Debt on Your Mental Health and Tips to Overcome

(BPT) – Did you know that one of the biggest factors impacting mental health is the burden of debt? The Hidden Cost of Debt survey by National Debt Relief revealed that 70% of people believe that debt makes them feel like a black cloud hangs over them, in addition to one-in-three people reporting debt has led to an increase in anxiety and stress. What's more, 69% of people said being in debt has made them withdraw from the things they love.

"It's time to break the stigma and normalize having conversations about debt and its toll on mental health," said Dr. Regine Muradian Psy.D. and National Debt Relief Financial Wellness Board Member. "Feeling isolated and alone is common for people facing financial problems, despite it being an experience shared by many Americans. People lose sleep, detach from friendships and feel hopeless."

As inflation causes the cost of living to rise, more people are experiencing stress related to money. Dr. Muradian shares tips on the best ways to cope with and ultimately overcome the mental impact of debt.

1. Create a master plan and celebrate the steps along the way

Being in debt can make you feel helpless, overwhelmed and isolated. These feelings can significantly impact your mental health and feeling of self-worth. The first step to regaining control over your finances is establishing a plan that allows you to take ownership of your path to becoming debt-free.

Evaluate your total debt owed and break down the micro-steps you need to take to get to your goal of paying it all off. The good news is that there are organizations such as National Debt Relief that are able to help establish an affordable plan and be your supportive coach to regain your financial independence.

2. Prioritize yourself by practicing self-care

It's important to remember that your debt does not define who you are. Carve out time for self-care that helps you feel happy and healthy. Some of the best self-care options don't cost anything, so you simply need to dedicate time in your week to prioritize these activities.

Need some no-cost self-care ideas? Consider walking in a local park, reading a book, taking a long bath, meditating, drawing or calling a friend for a casual conversation.

3. Have transparent conversations with partners and family

The Hidden Cost of Debt survey found three in five Americans have considered putting off marriage to avoid inheriting their partner's debt and 54% of people believe having a partner who is in debt is a major reason to get a divorce. Many people avoid conversations with partners because of the shame attached with debt.

While conversations around having babies or the prospect of marriage are commonplace at the start of serious relationships, debt and finances are often taboo. Being transparent and open to conversations about finding solutions can help build your relationship up rather than tear it down.

4. Don't do it alone, find tools to help

Asking for help and finding a supportive community can build confidence and provide direction that makes a positive impact on your finances and mental health.

Take Michelle Ventura from Virginia Beach who found herself in more than $19,000 of debt following her divorce. Overwhelmed by outstanding credit-card bills and legal fees, she felt an immense amount of pressure to get out of debt for her personal well-being and her family's livelihood.

On the brink of bankruptcy, Ventura sought support from National Debt Relief. Their team developed a plan and negotiated with creditors on her behalf, reducing her debt by $9,000, which allowed her to pay off her debt faster than she anticipated.

"Navigating debt as a single mom was incredibly challenging. I felt alone in this journey but working with National Debt Relief gave me the expertise and emotional support I needed to tackle my debt and conquer any obstacle I faced along the way," said Ventura. "Being debt-free gave me back control of my life. Now I can focus on my family and the people who matter most."

For support in navigating debt, please visit nationaldebtrelief.com or call 800-919-0828 to learn more. •

A City Clerk with Zeal: Aisha L. Thompson

By Allison Armijo

City Clerk Aisha L. Thompson approaches everything in her life with zeal and passion for new and existing endeavors.

When she was a student at Riverside Community College, Aisha L. Thompson was called into the Vice President of the college's office. She had just received the news that she had won the election to be vice president of the student council. However, as she sat in the VP's office, Thompson was called something she had never been called before: zealous.

Not understanding what exactly the word meant, she immediately started googling definitions and examples. She was pleasantly surprised by what she found. "I loved all the accolades that came with it," she said. "When you stand for something and make change, people respect you." Having secured her new position on the student council, Thompson made strides to advocate for students and work alongside faculty members to ensure everyone's voice was heard.

Raised in Carson, California, Thompson spent her childhood years surrounded by community in and around the church. It was here where she was encouraged to pursue dance by Enester Davis, the Minister of Music at Greater Liberty Baptist Church in Los Angeles. "It was her who showed me that dancing is and has always been inside of me," Thompson explained. She remembers when Davis would take a group of young girls at the church, give them a song, and tell them to make a dance out of it. Thompson was thirteen when she choreographed her first dance.

At the time, Thompson was a member of Glad, standing for Greater Liberty Anointed Dancers, which was affiliated with the church.

Inglewood's City Clerk Aisha Thompson

The group disassembled after a few years. However, Thompson was approached by a few women in the church who wanted to continue to dance. They encouraged her to lead, mentor, and choreograph in the Praise Dance Ministry, Glad II. The group maintains a strong local and global influence, having choreographed for affiliate groups in places as far as South Africa and Los Angeles. Thompson maintains her position as director and mentor today, serving for 28 years and counting.

This dedication and passion to uplift the community in dance contributed to Thompson's decision to pursue a career in public service. She remembers the summer going from her junior into her senior year when Councilwoman Maxine Waters won her seat as the U.S. Representative for California. "I was in a government class at the time, and I said, you know, I think I want to do this," she said. Specifically, Thompson admired the way Councilwoman Waters addressed her constituents and the greater public; she felt heard and validated.

The following year, Thompson ran for Commissioner of Publicity at Carson High, winning the seat. The victory excited her to pursue a career in public service following graduation. Inspired by Councilwoman Waters and the community of support around her, she felt determined to make a difference. "When you see someone making a change, you want to be like that. You want to be a part of it," she explained.

Thompson served for fifteen years as a Civil Service Employee to Inglewood and six years in the California State Assembly. After that, she served as Deputy City Clerk, where she played an instrumental role in facilitating many city processes, such as coordinating Municipal Elections, distributing budgets and meeting agendas, and other office management tasks. Altogether, Thompson has served the residents of Inglewood for 18 years, and she looks forward to many more.

On November 3, 2020, Thompson decided to run for the position of City Clerk. As a first-time candidate, she made history as the first elected official to get the most votes on her first run. She describes this as one of her proudest moments in public service.

Outside of her professional life, Thompson is also most proud of the relationships she has with her family. She is proud to be a mother to her son Quentin. And outside of her fellow constituents on the City Council, she is grateful to her mom for always supporting her and pushing her. "My mom has been the strongest influence in my life," she explained. "Because at times when I felt like giving up a long time ago, even before running for office, I was going to quit my job, and my mom was right there for me."

Thompson's favorite quote is one said by her mother, Vencil Smith: "Aim to be the best you can be."

Thompson's ultimate goal is to become a Congresswoman, reaching the community around her in new and exciting ways. However, she is determined to reach her goals in and around the City of Inglewood, not limited to, but including increased awareness and accessibility of the voting process to young residents and maintaining and creating powerful, sustainable relationships with her community members.

To this day, Thompson approaches the word zealous with vigor and determination; she is proud of all she has accomplished but is not yet done. •

Your Neighborhood Therapist

Dear Neighborhood Therapist,

I feel like I have been beaten up so much lately. I have not been physically assaulted, but I am subject to a lot of messages from society, work, and even family, about me not mattering as a person. I have enough problems already in my life; the last thing I need is the people who are close to me telling me there’s a problem with the parts of me that I have no control over. Instead, I’ve been feeling a ton of anger lately, and seeing it boil over, too. That doesn’t feel like the “me” that I know very well, but I’m also strangely OK with that. Should I be worried? I’m thinking about this all the time. Should I try to change this? Should I “channel” the anger into something productive?

— So Angry, El Segundo

Dear Angry,

I suppose the proper, most socially acceptable thing to tell you would be that what you need to do is think about the anger that’s affecting you and find other, “healthier” ways to release it. I suppose I should tell you something similar to what we tell our kids: that one good way to handle being attacked is to walk away, turn the other cheek, take the high road - or perhaps, if the offense is great enough, report them to authorities.

It’s not horrible advice. But it’s not great, either. Why? Because like most things in life, we want to make it simpler than it is. What are the consequences of telling a teacher, or walking away, or turning the other cheek? What if we don’t believe that will fix the problem?

Life sometimes hands us conflicts we do not seek. It puts in front of us problems which we cannot ignore, either for our own sake or that of the people we love. What do you do when you’re ambushed by a mountain lion on a morning hike? What do you do when you meet the bully when there’s nobody around, and he takes a swing at you?

Anger most often shows up when we believe that one of our values has been violated, and when it comes in too hot, or at unwanted times, it can cause us to behave in ways that cause problems for us and for others. Sometimes anger and rage come on so quickly that we only have time to react, not carefully consider or plan a good response - for example, when we are ambushed with a legitimate threat to our lives, or the lives of our loved ones.

Sometimes, survival doesn’t offer the luxury of turning the other cheek. So we fight for our lives, Righteous Anger right there with us in the trenches, and perhaps even throwing the punches (or sending the emails!) for us. Is this that kind of situation for you? Are you in, in some way, a fight for your life? If the stakes are as high as you imply, then maybe changing the way you feel or finding a “healthy outlet” isn’t the best way to go. If Righteous Anger asked you, “What can I do for you?” what do you think you would say? Can it help you in that way, without taking over your life and getting you into trouble? If so, perhaps Righteous Anger is just the partner you need right now.

impressive—besides the fact that Butler is able to talk, sing, and dance like the singer—is that he impersonates the entertainer impeccably at every stage of his life; from early break through, to middling mid-career, to sweat-faced final act. His mannerisms are perfect, and perfect for each stage, turning in a performance that’s nothing short of passionate, committed, and phenomenal.

Now, Elvis is not perfect. The movie is certainly superficial and surface-level, and it really isn’t designed to create nuanced drama. Its first act is wonderful, but when the movie down shifts into its second and third acts, the story loses just a bit of momentum. But Elvis tells the story of an American icon in such a way that gives the man newfound respect, coloring him as a person whose past was more tragic than we knew. By the time the film approaches its finale—the chips of his life in pill-popping disarray—we’re met with one of the most arresting musical sequences in the form of a rendition of Unchained Melody that blends fiction and reality marvelously. During his final public performance, and underneath all the glitz and grandeur, we hear and feel the presence of a young singer who might have only ever wanted to be free.

2h 39m. Elvis is rated PG-13 for substance abuse, strong language, suggestive material and smoking. •

He retired from baseball in May of 2021 and has been focused on his MMA training and his 9-5 job as an escrow assistant for Guaranty Escrow for the past year or so.

Wyatt and Garrett live in Manhattan Beach, taking care of their dogs, Zeke and Lamar. Wyatt works in Palos Verdes and trains in Santa Monica. He has been training at the Dynamix MMA gym for a year, with a full schedule of training and recovery. His training includes kickboxing training, wrestling, jiu-jitsu, and a heavy dose of cardio-vascular training. The brothers work with an array of coaches at Dynamix, including Antoni Hardonk and Vladimir Matyushenko.

Wyatt started competing initially in jiu-jitsu competitions, which he categorized as "grappling; you are not getting punched in the face or anything." He reiterated that, as a combat sport participant, "you have two opponents. You must beat the scale the day before and beat the opponent the day of the competition."

Wyatt detailed having an opponent bust his nose in a fight, which does not lend to a competitor being all too fired up about quickly jumping back into the ring. "After a fight, you don't want to get hit in the head," he said.

An amateur, Wyatt said that his plan is to participate in a couple of fights in 2022 and then compete in "five-to-seven" fights next year, pointing toward becoming a professional MMA fighter. Wyatt said that his first competitive experience was in "several No-Gi Jiu-Jitsu tournaments," where he took the bronze medal in the Jiu-Jitsu World Leagues San Diego event in January of 2022 in the 208-pound division.

He said that, after training for a year, he had his first two fights in Muay Thai, which is a stand-up style of fighting that originated in Thailand, and that involves "punches, kicks, knees, elbows, and clinch," which sounds like the shenanigans of a National Hockey League game in the Gordie Howe era.

Wyatt won his first match, which took place in Phoenix, AZ, this April, in less than 90 seconds. He said that there are many different iterations of "striking sports" but that the Dynamix gym focuses on Dutch Kickboxing, with the gym's head coach, Hardonk, being a former kickboxer from the Netherlands who trained along with kickboxing legends.

As for Garrett, he also attended West L.A. College and then Cal State Los Angeles University, but when COVID shutdown sports in 2020, he was "having trouble getting the attention of scouts and teams," he said, which led him to "lose some of the drive and passion for baseball. It was around that time that I fell in love with watching UFC and mixed martial arts." So, after hanging up his baseball spikes, Garrett said, "I was ready to transition to the MMA immediately."

After training for a year, Garrett had his first fight in Muay Thai in April of this year, winning by technical knockout in the Phoenix contest.

Garrett is eager to continue his progression in his newfound passion. "I am going to have a few more Kickboxing fights," he said, "before transitioning into MMA sometime next year, where I will then [hopefully] continue to progress and get closer to my dream of being a professional kickboxer/martial artist." Garrett said he was inspired by the exploits of MMA legend Conor McGregor and tried to figure out a way to start and excel in the sport and began, like his brother, hitting the pads at Rec Park.

Garrett said that his first fight was a Muay Thai bout in Phoenix in April 2022. He won the bout, calling it the "most exhausting workout of my life," noting that the fight lasted only four minutes and included a break. He recounted one fight he won, where his opponent had suffered a cracked orbital bone and was seeing double. "I don't like hurting people," Garrett said, "but it is cool to win." He said that being in a fight does not necessarily make for a memorable moment; he typically cannot recall "seventy-five percent" of the battle, calling it "kind of a blur." It is a unique experience," he said. "I really like it, and at the same time, I don't. I like it more than I hate it, so it is OK."

As for the MMA skill of brother Garrett, Wyatt said, "I always make fun of him, [telling] him that he is a bad grappler, because he is much more focused on Kickboxing. I make jokes that he is terrified of getting taken down."

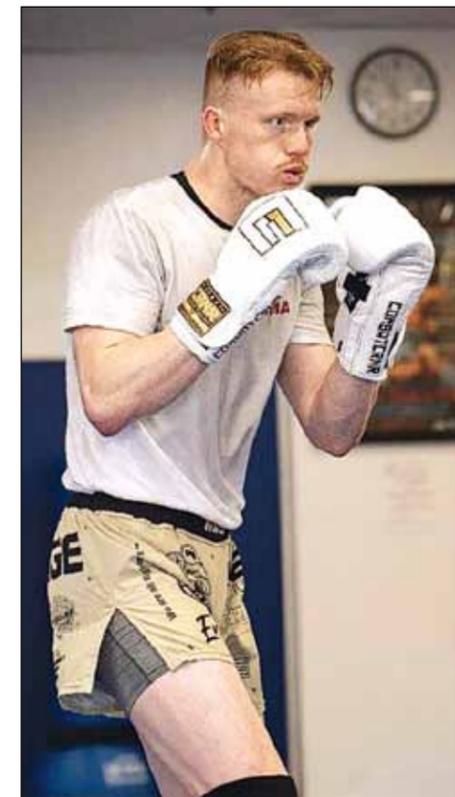

Asked to comment on his brother's MMA skills, Garrett said, "If we went one-on-one, just in Kickboxing, I would knock him out," while calling his brother "a great grappler."

"But if it were just Kickboxing," Garrett said, I would knock him out for sure. I would not want to, but I would."

No one knows what the future holds, but if the Boyce brothers continue pursuing MMA stardom, you may turn on the tube in the upcoming years and watch a fight with the marquee outside the arena touting the epic bought Boyce vs. Boyce. They could hold the contest in Philadelphia, the city of Brotherly Love? •

And the Winner is Garrett Boyce.

The City seeks the community's input on the documents, as these funds are for the primary benefit of low- and moderate-income residents. All interested persons wishing to make comments or provide input on the draft documents are invited to comment during the thirty (30) day comment period beginning June 26, 2022 through July 26, 2022. Comments may be submitted to the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) Division at the address below. Inglewood City Hall, CDBG Division One W. Manchester Boulevard, Suite 750 Inglewood, California 90301 Comment Period: June 26, 2022 through July 26, 2022 The Consolidated Plan and Annual Action Plan for the City of Inglewood serves as the grant application to the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) for its federally funded entitlement grant programs.

The Consolidated Plan includes funding for the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) Program and the HOME Investment Partnerships (HOME) Program. The City of Inglewood wishes to encourage comments from extremely low- to moderate-income persons, particularly from those persons living in neighborhoods where the funds are proposed to be used. It is anticipated that the following levels of funding will be available for the fiscal year October 1, 2022 through September 30, 2023: CDBG: $1,267,192 HOME: $ 898,785 The City has also prepared the Analysis of Impediments to Fair Housing Choice in accordance with the provisions of the Fair Housing Act of 1968. The Act prohibits discrimination in housing because of race, color, sex, familial status, national origin or disability and requires HUD to administer housing and urban development programs that further the Fair Housing Act. HUD requires all CDBG and HOME grantees to certify they have taken appropriate action to promote "one or more attributes of fair housing" that is "affordable, safe, decent, free of unlawful discrimination, and accessible as required under civil rights law." To determine appropriate actions, the City has prepared the 2022 AI which analyzes data, engages the community, identifies fair housing issues, and establishes fair housing goals and reasonable and meaningful actions. Beginning June 26, 2022, the Con Plan, AAP, and the AI, will be available online, for the public to review on the homepage of the City's website www.cityofinglewood.org under the sub-heading: Inglewood News. This Project will be awarded based on an entities ability to construct and operate a hotel within the air space rights above a City parking garage structure.

Scope Overview:
 The City of Inglewood, California is considering the construction of a 500-space multi-story public parking garage located at 139 S. Market Street (the "Property") in the heart of downtown Inglewood. A fiscal analysis performed on the Property shows that the best economic performance for its overall development would include the construction and operation of a hotel use in conjunction with the parking structure developed within the air space rights above the public parking garage. district that contains So-Fi Stadium, the Forum and Intuit Dome. The City is looking for a public-private partnership opportunity that would entail the construction and operation of a hotel within the air space rights above the parking garage structure.
