South Bay's "Unofficial Weatherman" Avery Smith Indulges his Passion

By Duane Plank

Avery Smith has been a resident of our fine town for nearly two decades. He financially supports his wife and three children, toiling as the president of Kelsey National Corporation located in Los Angeles. "(KNC) is an experienced marketer and administrator of fully insured group and HMO benefit plans, developed especially for small businesses and trade association members across the United States." At least that is what the website says, adding that "KNC offers a competitive line of group medical, dental, life and disability income products. Additionally, KNC offers a portfolio of quality insurance products and HMOs to individual customers."

So, there is that. But, for the well-adjusted amongst us, work does not, and should not, define us.

Smith is much more than a big cog in the always-expanding United States insurance industry. He has also volunteered in the community, coaching local Little Leaguers for a decade, and became a member in 2016 of the Santa Monica Bay Chapter of the Young Presidents Association, which is touted as "the premier association for executives worldwide."

And Smith was selected in 2020 to become a member of El Segundo's nascent Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion Committee. So, you can see that Smith strives to give back to his community in multiple ways.

Long-time friend and neighbor Veronica Bryce was asked her thoughts on Mr. Smith: "I've known Avery Smith for the past several years. We are friends and neighbors (our kids have been in the same grade and schools)," she emailed.

"Avery is one of the most genuine individuals you will meet. He is thoughtful, friendly, empathetic, and always welcomes innovative ideas and discussions. He strives to understand others' perspectives and truly does look to establish partnership and alliance, be it a professional or social situation. He is a good egg, through and through."

El Segundo resident Michael Alcala has known Smith for a decade, through coaching stints and following youth sports endeavors. And it turns out that Smith and Alcala now have a working relationship, with Alcala working for the past seven years with Smith.

"We connected a lot," Alcala said, "based

Eddie V's Brings Class to South Bay's Nightlife

Story by Chase Yi

Photos by Daniel Christopher Caso

There's an electricity that going out to a nice dinner sparks, and Eddie V's in El Segundo (on the corner of Rosecrans Ave. and S Nash St.) brings a strong current to South Bay's nightlife.

Upon entering the front lobby, the atmosphere is reminiscent of a swanky New York piano bar. The entrance opens up to a main dining area on the left and heading to the right, the moody lighting leads to a large bar with more seating around a small stage where patrons can enjoy live music. Past the bar, more outdoor seating is available with blue, luxurious patio furniture and large fire pits. It's definitely the kind of place where you dress up, and not for the stress of having to get ready, but because you want to look nice and enjoy a good meal with family and friends.

Seated in a comfortable, spacious booth, waiters are flying around with an exuberance. Employees wear white dinner jackets or black bistro attire, and the main waiter for the night, Eddie Gonzales, approached our table with excitement in his voice. Wearing a face mask, he clearly explained the menu and shared an impressive wine list curated by Max Vandercook (Eddie V's Bar Manager). Gonzales tracked the different regions around the world where they import their wines, as well as showcasing their

Film Review

'Annette' is An Absurdly Odd Rock Opera That Will Wow You

By Ryan Rojas for cinemacy.com

It may be best to know before watching Annette (available to stream on Amazon Prime this Friday) that it was not originally intended to be a film. Rather, it was conceived to be performed as a live musical production. With an original story and music written and composed by art pop band Sparks, Annette is beyond anything that is or would have been a conventional musical production.

self-aware circus that's as infectiously catchy as it is bizarrely confounding. But for as much fun as it is, its pop music makeup is also the thing that makes it unable to be profound or deep in any real way (paying less dividends the longer it goes on). But I'd recommend managing those expectations and going into this film headstrong anyways, for it's one of the most mind-blowing films of the year.

To be prepared for what you're getting into with Annette is to know the particular brand of oddball that the brothers who make up the band Sparks are. Over the entirety of their very long career, Ron and Russell Mael have made brilliantly catchy music. However, it's not been without also defiantly distancing themselves from commercial compromise, to the point that true mainstream success has eluded them (Edgar Wright made the rock doc The Sparks Brothers earlier this year as an ode to their unsung greatness).

Always interested in charting new waters rather than playing into expectations explains why Annette came into existence as a musical at all (initially, Russell would play the lead role and Ron the supporting male role). That is, until the duo met director Leos Carax when he used one of their songs for his film Holy Motors. And what happened next is—eight years later—Carax would take their story and bring it to the big screen.

With all of this in mind, it should be no surprise to find that Annette is exactly what you would expect a rock opera from Sparks to feel like: a wonderfully strange and

Inspired by The Umbrellas of Cherbourg and its “sung-through” storytelling, Annette is sung from beginning to end, with “So May We Start” (the film’s best song) kicking things off in a very meta-musical overture in which all of the characters tee up our film. Annette tells the story of a stand-up comedian (Adam Driver) and an opera singer (Marion Cotillard) who fall in love (they sing “We Love Each Other So Much” while on a motorcycle) and have a child. And yet by the time the child has come—gifted in its own right—the couple’s love has fractured to the point that it puts lives in danger.

Beyond its memorably wacky songs and story, the unquestionable stand-out in the film is Adam Driver. As Henry McHenry, a tormented comedian whose darkly clouded decisions lead him into a world of despair, Driver makes the character his own, from wild slapstick comedic scenes to the more nuanced and commanding ones. Marion Cotillard and Simon Helberg also star in the film—and Cotillard matches Driver’s commitment and star power as the opera singer

Your Neighborhood Therapist

Dear Neighborhood Therapist,

I have been seeing a therapist for about six months now. I am feeling a lot better, and I'm thinking that perhaps it is time to stop. How do I know if therapy is working, and when a good time to stop would be?

– Happy About Feeling Better, El Segundo

Dear Happy About Feeling Better,

It's great that you're feeling better. Your question is a really difficult one because there is usually no right or wrong answer about when to stop, but the fact that you're asking about it probably means that it's time to start thinking about how you want to move forward.

The reason there is no right or wrong answer is because there are too many variables. It depends not only on each of our own individual life experience, but also what is happening around us, as well as our ability to attend meetings, our relationship with the therapist we work with, and of course financial considerations - namely, the perennial question of whether or not it's worth it.

I have worked both with people who have been doing quite well for years, as well as people who have had many problems to contend with who only came to therapy for a short period of time. No therapist should try to “keep” you in therapy any longer than necessary. Some people find value in coming weekly for months or years, while others want to move on as quickly as possible. Both ways of working are just fine.

How will you know if therapy is working? The most unsatisfying answer is that it's almost impossible to be sure - again, because there are so many variables, including the possibility that you might start to feel better whether or not you talk to someone. The slightly less unsatisfying answer is that sometimes it takes a little while to figure out if it's working.

The best answer is that there's a better way to think about it. Thinking about whether or not therapy is “working” implies but there is something that needs fixing. It also implies that there is some state of being “better” that is definitely achievable. I just don't agree that there is always either something that needs fixing or that we can always get to a better place in life. For example, when people experience grief and loss, there's often nothing to “fix,” because there's nothing “wrong” - just sad.

Most people in most circumstances don't need any kind of fixing whatsoever. The better way to think about therapy is to ask if the meetings are helpful. For example, are you being asked to reflect on your life and your circumstances in ways that are helpful to you? Are you being “seen” in a way that is genuine?

Your decision when to stop, but I would invite you to think about it differently. When you find someone you like and trust, have a conversation about changing the frequency of meetings - for example, meeting less often, or only “as needed.” Most therapists are happy to accommodate these changes if they can. That way, you won't have to guess about when the “right time” is; instead, you'll just go if and when you need or want to.

News for the City of Good Neighbors from an Old Guy named Norb Huber

WEDDINGS, AERO PLANES AND LIFE

The Huber/Yates family flew up to Portland, Oregon this past weekend to attend our nephew's wedding. We got up early to get to Sacramento's fine airport only to find out that our flight had been delayed for two hours. No problem, I found some coffee and read a few chapters of "A Life Well Played", written by the late, great, golfer Arnold Palmer. We arrived safely in the City of Roses and hopped on a shuttle to the Budget rental car lot. Navigating the freeways in Portland is not all that difficult and we made it downtown to eat at our namesake restaurant, Huber's. It's the oldest bar and restaurant in Portland, having been established in 1879. We are not related to the founding family, nonetheless, the unique dining hall and great food made for a good outing. Someone at the wedding made the comment that many families have a tendency to only gather for weddings and funerals. Weddings usually are a little bit happier occasion than the latter. So, the question is asked, who will be the next family member to get married or kick the bucket? Since I'm advanced in age, naturally some of my extended family/critics look my way. I tell friend or foe to have a good time at my funeral. I wouldn't want my departure to be anything but a festive occasion, full of gaiety and cold ones. This weekend's wedding party had four kegs at the reception for roughly 100 thirsty souls. You know darn well that when there is an "open bar" and the poor bride's father is picking up the tab, I'm going to partake of not "a" cold one but several. A Christian wedding is certainly different than just your old, "justice of peace", say a few words, kiss the bride, Elvis drive thru hookup gathering. Christians believe that God brings a man and woman together to be joined in the holy state of matrimony. Christ is present as the couple speak vows to "have and to hold, for better or for worse til death do them part". Wow! Do you mean that I get to love my old lady til I crock? She said "yes" to me, way back in the day! She must not have known me too well, but somehow, some way, she has tolerated me all of these years. God says "yes" to us every day. He not only tolerates us, he forgives us and treats us as his dear children.

Electric Vehicle? Lower Costs and Easier Than You Think

(BPT) - Electric vehicles (EVs) are the future of transportation, offering a fun to drive alternative to traditional gas-fueled cars as well as lower maintenance costs. Almost every major automaker is introducing new electric models - from SUVs and trucks to sports cars and motorcycles.

EVs are becoming so widely available that more than 500 different EV models will be available globally by 2022, according to estimates from Bloomberg New Energy Finance.

To support this growing need for EV recharging, significant investments are being made concerning charging stations, making it easier than ever to own an EV. The U.S. Department of Energy reports that more than 42,000 total EV charging station locations exist in the United States as of June 2021 - and the president has set a goal to reach 500,000 charging stations nationwide by 2030. As the auto industry becomes more electrified, learning about the basics of EV charging like how and where to charge, is the first step in helping drivers feel more comfortable - and even excited - about the idea of switching to an EV that fits their lifestyle.

Types of Ev Chargers

Charging at home, work and other public locations all require different types of chargers - and it's important to understand the differences.

Public Fast DC-Chargers

Currently, the fastest way to charge an EV is with direct current (DC)-fast chargers, which are usually found in public and commercial settings like grocery store and shopping center parking lots. These stations provide charging speeds faster than what drivers would find in home chargers, allowing them to get back on the road more quickly.

Electrify America, for example - the largest public ultra-fast DC charging network in the U.S., with more than 640 charging stations and more than 2,860 individual chargers - offers the fastest available charging speeds today, allowing capable EVs to add up to 20 miles of range per minute.

Home Chargers

One perk of an EV is the ability to power up without even leaving the house. At home,

How to Reduce Your Risk Of Age-Related Macular Degeneration

(BPT) - Creating a tapestry of vivid colors and patterns, Geri Wires, an avid quilter, relies on her sight to create her art. So, in 2007 after her dilated eye exam and speaking with her eye doctor, she was alarmed at the diagnosis of age-related macular degeneration (AMD) at age 64. AMD is one of the leading causes of vision loss among people 50 and older and affects 16 million Americans - more than glaucoma and cataracts combined.

“After my diagnosis, the reality of AMD and its potential effects on my vision became very serious to me,” Wires said. To help manage her condition, Wires began taking Bausch + Lomb PreserVision® AREDS 2 Formula eye vitamins twice daily at her doctor’s suggestion as part of an action plan that includes a healthy diet and regular exercise. PreserVision®

AREDS 2 formula eye vitamins contain the nutrient formula recommended by National Eye Institute (NEI) researchers to help reduce the risk of progression in people with moderate to advanced AMD.

AMD is a progressive eye condition caused by degeneration of the part of the retina that impacts central vision. Early-stage AMD often does not present any symptoms or vision changes, as symptoms usually appear gradually over time. In its later stages, AMD can lead to difficulty with daily activities like driving, reading, or recognizing the faces of loved ones, according to the NEI.

New Nei Data Shows Specific Vitamin Mix Can Help Reduce Risk of AMD Progression

Ann—but one of the faults of the film is that it underwrites the rest of the characters in the service of Driver (perhaps because he was attached to the film since Leos Carax saw him in Girls eight years ago when he was first pursued for the part).

And then of course, we need to mention the nature of baby Annette herself, whose hilariously marionette-like characterization as an actual wooden puppet provides the film's silliest and un-serious depiction, further poking at the charade of the whole thing. And yet, there's still a soft and gentle beauty in Annette's presence, which counters Henry's forgone depravity, but fails to reach a real emotional impact. There are themes of art and love and life and death interwoven throughout Annette but you'll have a much more enjoyable time if, instead of looking for an experience that will leave you emotionally floored, you give yourself over to a strange world that is sure to leave you in awe, for better or worse.

2hr 21min. 'Annette' is rated R for sexual content including some nudity, and for language. •

demonstrated that taking a specific combination of antioxidants and zinc could help reduce the risk of progression of AMD. Most recently in May 2021, results of the 10-year follow-up on the AREDS2 study show that a specific nutrient mix and dosage, known as the AREDS 2 formula, continues to reduce the risk of AMD progression and further clarify the importance of an AREDS 2 supplement as part of a patient's action plan.

The exact combination of vitamins and minerals in the AREDS 2 formula - vitamin C (500mg), vitamin E (400 IU), lutein (10mg)/zeaxanthin (2mg), zinc (80mg zinc oxide) and copper (2mg cupric oxide) - is difficult to achieve from diet alone, and standard multivitamins or other eye vitamins generally do not contain the same level of nutrients.

Today, Wires continues to take her eye vitamins as part of her overall plan to help manage her condition and visits her eye doctor every six weeks for a check-up.

"I'm involved in a group that helps sew masks for the community and without taking steps to help reduce the risk of progression of my AMD, I may not have been able to help sew more than 1,000 masks at the height of the pandemic," Wires said. "I'm glad that by working with my eye doctor and following my plan, I'm still able to quilt and enjoy time with my family."

Reducing Your Risk of AMD

As people age, their risk of eye-related diseases like AMD increases dramatically, according to U.S. Census data. Smokers, women and those with a family history of AMD are at higher risk of developing AMD.

Over 50? The following lifestyle changes recommended by NEI can help protect your eye health.

1. Quit smoking. Smokers are at higher risk. If you smoke, preserving your vision is a good reason to quit.

2. Stay active. Regular exercise may lower your risk or slow progression of the disease.

3. Safeguard against UV light. Especially if you work outdoors, protect your eyes with sunglasses.

4. Boost your diet. Maintain a healthy diet and take vitamins that contribute to eye health and ask your eye doctor what eye vitamin is appropriate for you.

5. Get regular eye exams. See your eye care provider regularly to help detect minor changes that may otherwise go unnoticed. Eye doctors can check for AMD as part of a comprehensive dilated eye exam. During this painless exam, your doctor will give you some eye drops to dilate (widen) your pupil and then check your eyes for AMD and other eye problems.

Marriages are made in heaven. God selected my bride for me, it was a prearranged pairing. Marriages might be made in heaven, but they are lived out here on earth. There will be challenges, disagreements, even drag out fights over a lot of little things here on earth. The difference in a Christian marriage is the "forgiveness factor". Because God has forgiven us, we can forgive one another, even our spouses. Isn't it grand how God works in our lives? He knows what is best for us. He knows who that "special one" is for us to meet, hang around, and make a life time vow to stick with forever. The officiating pastor at this outdoor wedding said it like this, "When the intoxicating beer of blind love runs out, that's when marriage really begins." When the real stuff happens, like misunderstandings and arguments, that's when a cold one comes in handy to get us thru. We love our spouses, it's the living with them that becomes a challenge. God help us!

Oh, by the way, our flight back to Sacramento was delayed six hours due to a protruding gasket on the airplane's wing. Getting home at 3:20 a.m. the next morning makes for a long day. My dear friends, relax, rejoice, love your spouse like you are still love intoxicated.

You can file divorce papers to separate from my column at any time. It's simple, send me an email at norbhuber@gmail.com. There will be a nominal fee of $100 to process your documents. I don't do bitcoins. • on our coaching philosophy and backgrounds. We both just wanted to make sure all the kids had a blast... Winning was important, but not the 'utmost' important," citing their shared philosophy that if the youngsters had a positive experience, they would be much more apt to, when they became parents, sign their children up for youth sports competitions."

Alcala said of Smith: "His heart is in the right place. He is doing everything for the greater good. He wants the community to be better, which makes everybody better."

So, with all his work-related and volunteering duties, what other endeavors pique Mr. Smith's interests? Well, about five years ago, he said, he began writing weather forecasts on a popular El Segundo social media platform. A self-proclaimed "weather geek," Smith's knack for correctly predicting local weather patterns, coupled with his "detailed descriptions of weather patterns and climatology," quickly gained Smith in-town popularity, with his followers branding him as "El Segundo's unofficial weatherman."

Here is a blurb from a recent post on the El Segundo Weather Facebook page: "We registered a few drops/sprinkles this morning and expecting that activity to push out to sea soon with clearing skies and humidity. Temps will go up through the weekend with a big cool down coming next week."

Good to know, right? Time to find that umbrella?

How did Smith cultivate his interest in weather and weather patterns, you thoughtfully ask? His father is from Louisiana, and his mother is from West Africa. Family opportunities and obligations had Smith spending time in London. At age seven, after his plane was diverted from a London landing strip to Edinburgh, Scotland, Smith said he "saw my first snowflake, and I was hooked. It was the most amazing thing that I had ever seen." He said that, as he got older, he became interested in climate and climatology and their effects on weather. He started delving into the science of weather, and soon was posting on the El Segundo Parents Network social media page, and before you can say "climate change," the popularity of his prognostications, so help me retired meteorologist Fritz Coleman, "literally just took off."

"It has been very rewarding," Smith said of his posting climate prognostications, noting that he receives outreach from locals who may be partying in Mammoth or Palm Springs and seek his advice on weather patterns and possibilities.

Smith said that when he arises each morning, he will quickly check "about a half-dozen" weather and sports websites.

An alum of the University of California, Irvine, a proud Ant eater, who majored in History, Smith moved to El Segundo in 2002. He grew up in the Los Angeles/Baldwin Hills area, attending Palisades High School before continuing his education at UC Irvine. While Smith travels extensively for business, he said he has not strayed too far from his So Cal roots. Smith said that he was "tremendously inspired" by his eighth-grade History teacher, "I was fascinated by the way (he) told stories that could capture the class. The entire class was mesmerized by his teaching." He said that his teacher was able to bring historical occasions to life, challenging the students to try and get into the minds and thought processes of historical icons like George Washington as they faced their biggest challenges.

Post-graduation from UC Irvine, Smith was not sure about his next move, so he leaned on his Mom, who had a background in the insurance industry, and began his career in that field, a career that has spanned more than 20 years.

As for landing in El Segundo, Smith said that he had started a "new relationship," and his now wife, who pitched him on settling in El Segundo. Although Smith grew up a dozen-or-so miles from our town, he was not particularly familiar with the city's offerings.

Once he settled into town and started having kids, Smith, who played high school baseball and basketball, as well as "every sport I could when I was a kid," began to volunteer to coach Little League baseball, trying to help develop his son and other youths into "the next George Brett," a not-so-easy task that El Segundoians have been fervently attempting for decades.

His years of coaching yielded long-term friendships with local families, as well as shaped the baseball talents of many of his players, who have gone on to continue their pursuits up the youth baseball ladder. "I take credit for that," Smith said with a smile. "That was a very cool introduction," he said, of meeting community families through sports. "It is such a rewarding experience to volunteer. I felt that I always 'got back' so much, too," noting the excitement of guiding the young athletes, while also mentioning the all-too-prevalent "drama" with some of the parents, looking to parent "the next George Brett." Said Smith about being involved in youth sports programs: "It was a really wonderful way to become involved in the community."

For recreation, Smith said he was initially on the path to garnering a pilot's license, but that stalled out. He now does his "piloting" virtually, but does have aspirations, at some point, to "finish up" acquiring his actual pilot's license. It seems a good fit, with his interest in the machinations of weather patterns and how they might affect airborne travel.

He also anticipates continuing being an unpaid Uber driver, ferrying around his children as the new school and sports year commence.

Smith cherishes the uniqueness of El Segundo. "Small town community aspect," he said, ensconced in an isolated corner of the sprawl that is the county of Los Angeles. He even (somewhat) embraces the Hyperion sewage debacle, which has brought the community together to have to deal with a widespread problem.

As for inclusion in the DEI Committee, Smith said that he embraces the opportunities now available. "We have a very accepting city. Obviously, there are always people who are not, but overall, we have a wonderful, wonderful place. But I think the image of the city, unfortunately, has been tarnished by events in the past."

He is hoping to help guide El Segundo in the process of becoming a model city, which could be emulated across the country, embracing diversity and inclusion, all the while listening to differing viewpoints, and not just to the echo-chambers available on both the right and left sides of the political spectrum.

"I think we have a great town, but gosh, it could be even better," he said.

With the polarizing political climate currently out there, it is comforting to know that you can always get info on today's less-contentious weather climate by checking in online with Mr. Smith.

Remember that eighty-plus-year-old Jimmy Stewart film, Mr. Smith Goes to Washington? Well, El Segundo has its 21st Century version of Mr. Smith, right here in our own backyard. • two staples of the restaurant—USDA prime cut steaks and Goldwater lobsters flown in from South Africa's Tristan de Cuna (a small island of only seven inhabitants). Although it felt like a lot of information to grasp, Gonzales was effortless in his explanation and helped us navigate our selections from the menu.

To start, Gonzales recommended the jumbo lump crab cakes and the Maine lobster tacos. For good measure, my photographer and I also ordered the burrata & heirloom tomatoes. When the first round of orders arrived, the crab cake immediately caught our eyes. It's a generous portion, perfectly breaded with Panko crumbs. It's over 90% crab with a remoulade glaze on the bottom. More often than not, crab cakes have a soggy taste that comes with frozen transport, but these were fresh—certainly worth the $24 price. The burrata was also a refreshing bite from the savory crab cake with crisp, juicy tomatoes and a balsamic drizzle that made the dish almost dessert-like. However, the lobster tacos were overpowered by too many hints of Mexican flavor profiles, like grilled corn, cilantro, and a chive-infused tortilla that really took away from the succulence of the lobster meat. The Napa Valley Resiling is a good choice to cleanse the pallet before the other dishes arrive.

As soon as Gonzales and his waiter in training, Brittany Been (a resident of Torrance) cleared the table, the main courses arrived on cue—an 8oz center cut filet mignon ($44), the Chilean sea bass ($49), and a variety of sides (Georges bank scallops, lobster cheddar mashed potatoes, truffle mac & cheese, and the crispy Brussels sprouts—all served family-style).

The filet mignon was excellent. I didn't even have to use a steak knife to cut it. It was gone from the plate a second later. The Chilean sea bass (served Hong Kong style with a soy broth on a bed of sautéed spinach) was a similarly tasty bite. It was a sweet pairing against the heartier filet. The various sides offered a nice respite, too, from the entree flavors. The Korean glazed Brussels sprouts were the star of the night. Every bite was a kick to the tastebuds with notes of peanut, green onion, and traditional Korean BBQ. The truffle mac and cheese was also enjoyable, with large pieces of truffle to boost the profile. Lastly, the lobster mashed potatoes are the perfect "shareable" side dish—one scoop will fill you up. Needless to say, we had many great leftovers to take home.

At the end of the night, we were full-bellied and in a wonderful mood. Gonzales had shared with us that Eddie V's just opened last June, and since launching their new location (they have 29 across the country), they invested 8 to 10 million dollars in restructuring costs. Overall, it feels like money well spent. Gonzales even relocated his entire life from their Palm Desert location to help open the new space in El Segundo.

"Working here, it feels like what I'm called to do," says Gonzales. "My goal is to work in upper management, and maybe one day open a location in Tokyo. I speak fluent Japanese now. That would be a dream come true." • drivers use either a Level 1 or Level 2 charger, with the difference being how long it takes to get the car's battery fully recharged. Charging at Level 1 is most often used overnight, as these chargers usually add, on average, only 2-5 miles of range per 1 hour of charging to a depleted battery - meaning it will take about 8 hours to add 40 miles of range. Because Level 1 chargers expend less energy, they typically use a standard household outlet - like the one used to charge a smartphone or plug in a blender - and there's no special charging equipment installation required.

Level 2 charging is the faster charging option, which is commonly found in multi-unit dwellings. Examples include work offices, apartment complexes and hotels. This option also allows for drivers charging to fill up on more battery range in less time. Level 2 charging requires the purchase of special charging equipment and uses the kind of outlet needed to run larger, more powerful household appliances like a washer or dryer. Depending on the vehicle's battery size, Level 2 charging will add, on average, about 10-20 miles of range per one hour of charging from a depleted battery.

Paying for Public Charging
When plugging into a public EV charger, drivers will pay one of two ways, depending on the state where they're charging - either by the number of minutes a car is plugged into the charger, or by the amount of energy the charger uses in one hour, known as kilowatt hour or kWh pricing.

Quality Charging Experience
Connected services are making the charging experience easier than ever. Electrify America's easy-to-use mobile app, for example, means customers can manage aspects of the charging session - such as payment and remote monitoring of the session status - directly from their smart phones. The company is also introducing solar-powered canopies at select station locations, providing customers with weather protection while potentially storing energy. EVs are an exciting part of the future of transportation, and understanding the charging process is key as more drivers consider an EV lifestyle. As charging companies build more stations and apply new technologies to enhance the overall charging experience, the world moves even closer to making public EV charging as simple as filling up at a gas station - perhaps even easier. •
