Rock & Brews is Back for an Encore

Story and Photos by Chase Maser

El Segundo hasn't felt the same since mid-March.

There's a silence to the main drag that lingers in the air like a heavy fog. Almost as if the pulse of the town has been thrown into arrhythmia, picking up and slowing down as each day passes. But now, heading into the fall season, the pace is smoothing out. That dense shroud is breaking apart, and once the eyes resettle, the community will be pleased to see a familiar face staring back at them.

Located on the corner of Main St. and Franklin Ave., Rock & Brews has always been the hub of El Segundo's nightlife. With classic rock songs and a fun, electric atmosphere, a crowd of diners spilling out into the road was a normal occurrence. However, over the past five months, the location has been shut down longer than other restaurants on the strip—but why?

According to Rock & Brews CEO and Partner, Adam Goldberg, the governmentmandated shutdown of restaurants throughout Los Angeles County—due to COVID-19 really hit their El Segundo location the hardest. "It's been heart-wrenching for us as a company. We had to lay-off or furlough well over 50 people—some that have been with us for ten years since we opened." And caring for employees during the pandemic hasn't been the only challenge—the El Segundo location has also undergone a change in leadership.

The Rock & Brews franchise is under the umbrella of Rock & Brews Holdings LLC, which was founded by KISS icons Gene Simmons and Paul Stanley, as well as restaurateur

Michael Zislis and other industry veterans. Although—accounting for the extended delay in reopening—a new ownership group called Mayberry Beer Garden LLC has swooped in at the 11th hour to resurrect the single location from the dead and revitalize it with a brand new look.

"The new owners of this location include a group of family and friends from El Segundo and the South Bay area that wanted to see this place reopen," says Goldberg. "Working together, none of us wanted to see this place sitting closed for too long, and now that things are picking back up, we're shooting for a grand reopening on September 24th."

At first, some residents may think that new ownership means a new perspective of the restaurant, but Mayberry is essentially serving as a licensee of the franchise, and the corporate team is empowering the new owners with the right tools to continue the Rock & Brews brand in a community that gives it full support.

That said, there are some structural changes to the restaurant that diners can expect to see

In The Way I See It, Reagan and Obama's Official Photographer Shares The Presidency Through Photos

By Morgan Rojas for cinemacy.com

Immediately after the film ended, I texted my brother, Ryan: "Just watched The Way I See It for review and wow. Easily one of my favorite films of the year."

It's been claimed that photographer Pete Souza created the best photo archive of a President ever. After watching Dawn Porter's documentary, The Way I See It, I believe that statement solely based on the chills I got while watching the film.

Souza-who is charmingly referred to as "The King of Shade" on Instagram-stayed Perhaps the biggest takeaway is Pete's notion about the role of a leader, that not everyone will agree with your policies, but your behavior should always be respectable. This goes without saying that Pete's comments are pointed at one person in particular, but this simple yet common sense reminder applies to everyday situations too. A truly remarkable film, The Way I See It is proof that the impact of a still photo can say a lot more than words.

publicly apolitical throughout his entire career as the Official White House Photographer during the Ronald Reagan and Barack Obama presidencies; until now.

The ultimate fly on the wall, Souza not only captured some of the most influential and powerful moments in American history, but humanized the leaders in these roles. Since the Obama era ended, the mistreatment towards journalists and the free press has been increasingly disheartening. Having now reached his breaking point, Pete is finally speaking his mind on today's leadership, by sharing his secret weapon: his photos.

Through his lens, Pete gives the audience never before seen intimate moments from both the Reagan and Obama presidencies, the most powerful of which are the small, fleeting exchanges that are both beautiful and sentimental beyond words.

Creating Working Environments For Families To Thrive

(BPT) - No one has escaped the effects of the pandemic, but working parents are struggling. Staring down a lack of childcare, new work-from-home situations, and insufficient support from employers or public resources, these individuals are nearing the end of their rope emotionally, and for many, financially. The start of the school year further complicates matters as parents grapple with difficult decisions and limited options due to school policies or their own financial and employment constraints. While parents navigate this fraught period for their families and bank accounts, the country must understand three things: Where parents stand now, what they need from their employers in the future, and what can be done in the meantime to find relative peace and security.

Where Parents Stand

According to Prudential's Financial Wellness Census, over half of Americans said their financial health was negatively impacted following the outbreak of the pandemic. For Millennials and Gen X, many of whom are parents of school-aged children, more than one in five households saw their income fall by half or more. It is no surprise, then, that 58 percent of caregivers, a group which includes parents, are currently concerned for their financial futures. Working parents today are scared and depleted. Doing their jobs at home while simultaneously managing their children's health, entertainment and education all day, parents have been juggling at least two full-time jobs since March. On top of that stress, their changed financial situations have led to higher stakes and fewer solutions when it comes to education and care as the school year begins.

What Parents Want

In the midst of a financial crisis, the Financial Wellness Census found that Americans turn first to the federal government for help, followed closely by family and friends. Only 14 percent sought financial assistance from employers during this time, but results concerning employees' feelings about benefits reveal how workplaces can evolve to provide parents with greater support. The statistics are particularly telling for women, who typically carry a disproportionate amount of household childcare responsibilities. In fact, 43 percent of women want more flexible work options

SAD NEWS

Very sad news! The largest beer festival in the world, Oktoberfest, has been cancelled in 2020 due to the Corona Pandemic. Held annually in Munich, Bavaria, Germany, it is a 16- to 18-day folk festival running from mid- or late September to the first Sunday in October, with more than six million people from around the world attending the event every year. It is a 210-year-old tradition that wasn't originally a beer festival. The first Oktoberfest was held to honor the marriage of Prince Ludwig and Therese of Saxe-Hildburghausen, in 1810. You can't stop beer pouring! In 200 years, Oktoberfest has only been cancelled 24 times. The causes were mostly due to the war and cholera epidemics. People drank 7.5 million liters of beer in 2018. With so much beer being consumed it's obvious that some people might feel sick and end up puking... And that's why Adidas recently released a limited edition of vomitproof sneakers inspired by the Oktoberfest. Germans have generally been considered cold, stand offish sorts of people. That is true until they get some beer in their bellies. The cancellation of Oktoberfest is not only a blow to Germany's economy but a blow to their most fun loving time of the year. If this is not bad enough news, just today the CDC back here in the States has cancelled Halloween! The US health experts are recommending that trick or treating be eliminated. They have ranked the different Halloween activities on their safety concerns. Wow! No beer, no candy, what next? Life goes on. No matter what is declared safe or not safe, life goes on. The good news is that we still can enjoy life. We can still have a cold one. We can still buy a Snickers bar. We really don't have to rely on outside events or long standing traditions to be content and happy. Why get all up tight and upset about what is going on? Why worry? Be happy! By the way, the dates for Oktoberfest 2021 are September 18 thru October 3. Men get your lederhosen ready, and ladies your dirndls.

Me and my dear wife are flying up to Great Falls, Montana tomorrow to attend my aunt's funeral. Aunt Ruth, who was 92 years of age was mentally sharp right up to the end. She was very loving, and was always concerned for every member of her large family. She and her husband, uncle Russ, went out of their way to make everyone feel welcomed and loved. She leaves behind seven children, multiple grandchildren, and great-grandchildren. That love she shared with everyone will live on for

What They Can Do Now

Times are hard and deep systemic problems can slow needed changes. In the meantime, Amanda Clayman, financial therapist and Prudential's Financial Wellness Advocate, is guiding parents. "As parents in a state of fear and exhaustion, processing reality is difficult, which puts us at risk of reacting (often financially) instead of thoughtfully responding to our situation," says Clayman. "I recommend slowing down and asking yourself: What are the facts? What aspects of this situation do I control? And what is outside my control?" From there, Clayman encourages parents to find a best-fit solution for their family within their financial means. "Be open to giving up the idea of a feel-good decision and remember your family solution will look different from your peers," she says. Try looking to community resources for support and solace. No path forward is perfect in a pandemic, but by regularly tuning in to personal priorities, leaning on their communities, and reminding themselves of their emotional and financial adaptability, families can find avenues for support.

Working parents have responded to financial and situational setbacks with creativity and courage this year. Their efforts have kept them afloat, but they are tired. As these parents look to the future, workplaces can help by offering environments, benefits and scheduling options that allow their employees - and their employees' children - to thrive. Until then, keeping a firm grasp on their emotional and financial reality, being gentle with themselves, and taking pride in their flexibility will keep working parents going. •
