Hawthorne City Council Hears Different Views on Desalination

By Brian Simon

The most recent Hawthorne City Council meeting featured a standoff between Bruce Reznik, who heads the local environmental watch group Los Angeles Waterkeeper, and West Basin Municipal Water District (West Basin) Manager of Water Policy and Resources Development E.J. Caldwell concerning the agency’s potential ocean water desalination project in El Segundo. Desalination (desal) uses reverse osmosis to remove salt as well as minerals and viruses from water that is pumped through membranes under high pressure. Both individuals took turns at the podium presenting their positions on the matter as West Basin prepares to release the project’s final draft environmental impact report (EIR) by the end of the year. The agency has conducted its research on desal for 17 years and spent more than $60 million over that period.

Reznik urged the Council to oppose the project on a future agenda, arguing that the technology is the most expensive (one of the slides in his presentation showed an estimated price of $2,100 per acre foot that exceeded all other options, with an overall project cost thought to be in the range of $500-$600 million), most harmful to the environment and ocean life, and most energy intensive in adding to the grid and increasing carbon footprint. He maintained that there are better alternatives already underway including reducing water waste, reusing stormwater, recycling wastewater and restoring ground-water. Reznik contended that the desal plan does not meaningfully consider impacts on frontline communities. He also expressed concern that West Basin could choose to certify the EIR as soon as 15 days after its release. Reznik spoke of the need for a local water supply, but not one that creates “new problems.” Heal the Bay and Surfrider Foundation are among the groups opposed to the desal project.

In response, Caldwell noted that Reznik failed to focus on the potable drinking water supply that is at the core of West Basin’s mission. “We cannot drink half of the supplies he [Reznik] has on his charts,” he said. Delving into the particulars of the water supply and historical usage, Caldwell explained that West Basin’s region was completely reliant on groundwater before 1947. The number dropped to just 20 percent by 1990, with imported water now comprising 80 percent of the supply. Through its Water for Tomorrow Program, Caldwell said West Basin hopes to reduce reliance on imported water to 39 percent by 2030 -- with desal taking up 11 percent of the pie as one of the potable water sources.

Caldwell summarized West Basin’s efforts to protect both juvenile and adult sea life and larva from harm, and also inroads made in seeking clean technologies such as wind and solar to increase energy efficiency. He and Reznik disagreed on the potential of stormwater as a potable source. The latter maintained that this is already happening elsewhere. Caldwell confirmed that stormwater can be made drinkable in the San Gabriel Valley where water can “percolate,” but is not reusable in this particular area and that the costs to go potable are also astronomical. Speaking about the EIR timeline, Caldwell indicated that West Basin’s board would not move quickly on a project and that permitting will likely take years.

Both individuals took questions, with Councilmember Mike Talleda pointing out that “plastic is doing more damage to animals and the ocean than anything out there.” Councilmember Haidar Awad was curious about desalination plants in Israel and Australia as potential models for facilities here. Mayor Alex Vargas ultimately wrapped up the discussion by stating that he didn’t have “enough information to pass judgment.” He also put the onus on Reznik (whom he referred to as “someone we don’t know” asking to “oppose something one of our agencies is doing”) to provide more factual data with breakdowns on cost comparisons. Both he and City Manager Arnie Shadbehr mentioned Hawthorne’s status as a leader in the area of energy conservation.

Also on Tuesday, Councilmember Alex Monteiro received his colleagues’ blessing to stage a World Fest 2020 on Aug. 22 next year as a City-sponsored event designed to showcase Hawthorne’s diversity. He envisioned the festivities including music, food, arts and crafts, a mini carnival, rock climbing, video games and more. The idea, he emphasized, is “to bring all the cultures together” and “to show that Hawthorne is the ‘City of Good Neighbors’ in harmony with all the different cultures.”

Monteiro called for immediate formation of a planning committee and also asked to bring back the Christmas holiday parade in December 2021 to make this a multi-year process culminating in Hawthorne’s centennial celebration in 2022. That year would feature a 4th of July parade, Summer Fest and Christmas parade. Vargas strongly supported the plan and suggested the city manager look into getting a stage. He viewed the World Fest as a key step in “bringing back a golden age to Hawthorne” that he felt was lost 20-25 years ago. The rest of the Council concurred to move forward. Vargas later reiterated the desire to hold more activities, which he said is now realistic because

Film Review

A Director Reflects on His Prolific Past in Pain and Glory

By Jane Greenstein for Cinemacy.com

Pedro Almodóvar’s Pain and Glory, opening this Friday, is a lovely rumination on life, death, love and, of course, pain and glory (although the latter hard-won and not cherished). It would be easy to consume this film as an autobiography. This, after all, is a tale of a middle-aged film director experiencing a creative block brought on by both physical and seemingly spiritual pain after decades of prolific filmmaking. It’s made by the 70-year-old Almodóvar whose long and winding can’t propel himself forward. “Without filmmaking, my life is meaningless,” he says, yet it’s unclear what will motivate him to regain his creative footing.

The film skips through three periods of Salvador’s life: His childhood in the ‘60s, when he and his impoverished parents lived in caves in Valencia, Spain and he fell for a neighborhood laborer; his adulthood in ‘80s Madrid when his great, though tragic love affair occurred; and the present, where we see him become increasingly isolated and career has produced its share of masterpieces including Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown and Oscar winners All About My Mother and Talk to Her, along with other films that never caught fire with the public.

While there’s plenty in Pain and Glory that’s self-referential (including the use of the director’s flat, wardrobe and furniture) there’s also ample evidence that this is, as one character calls it, “autofiction.” Only at the end is the line between reality and fantasy drawn, but by then you’ll have gone on such a fantastic ride that it will hardly matter. Antonio Banderas, Almodóvar’s frequent alter ego, has never been better. This time, he plays Salvador Mallo, a director sidelined by crippling pain that he is pacifying with a recently acquired heroin habit. Though not to worry—this tale isn’t told through a drug-infused haze, but rather with a crystal clear and deeply colorful lens.

The first third of the film’s action begins around Salvador’s decision on whether and with whom to attend a tribute screening of his classic ‘80s film, Sabor. But this is merely a device to set off a string of events that lead the director to look back when he crippled psychologically as much as his body is physically impeded. Through these reflections, we learn about how his identity was formed, how he acquired his love for cinema, and his deep and stinging passions and losses.

The other guiding force of Pain and Glory, as is always the case with Almodóvar, is his palette of vibrant colors that bring magic to this film. The reds, greens, blues and bright patterns are alive in every scene, whether it be the operating room, an abandoned train station, the Valencia cave where the young Salvador and his family reside, or the dresses and scarves that his mother (played in her younger days by another Almodóvar regular, Penelope Cruz) wears.

If Pain and Glory proves to be Almodóvar’s swan song, he’s going out in a blaze of glory. This is as profound, moving and deeply engaging as a film you’re likely to see this year. It stands as another masterpiece from this Spanish auteur who is never afraid to examine his own foibles and frailties with a vision that few of his filmmaking disciples can come close to attaining. •

Wiseburn Board Views CARE Presentation

By Duane Plank

The only special presentation at last Thursday’s Wiseburn School Board meeting was from elementary counselors Dr. Monique Ingram and Julie Walker, who spoke of their Counseling and Access to Resources in Education (CARE) program. A major component of the counseling program is dealing with issues involving students deemed “at-risk” for certain issues. The presentation was well-timed, with a recent article noting that 20 percent of high school students who had responded to a survey had contemplated suicide.

The presentation began with the duo delineating their three-tiered pyramid programs goals and foundation for action that starts with all students on the bottom tier, students with some risk factors listed on the second tier, and the top tier targeting those perceived at high risk. The presentation noted goals, including supporting academic and social/emotional growth; embracing diversity while acknowledging individual need; building partnerships; and promoting a family-like atmosphere.

Ingram and Walker shared the results of need assessment surveys at the three Wiseburn Unified School District elementary schools in which teachers had participated, giving their opinions on myriad areas where students need to build skills. Areas listed included self-control, bullying, expressing feelings, promoting confidence, and communication.

The presenters spoke about supports offered to date, including parent/guardian coffee with the CARE team at all school sites, parent workshops and PTA presentations, intakes with new and existing families, and crisis support and collaboration.

“I am excited about the work that they have done,” Superintendent Dr. Blake Silvers said prior to the meeting. “It has really brought a comprehensive approach to counseling and student health at the elementary level. The goal for us as a school district should be addressing kids’ social and emotional states early on their lives so that we can continue to support well-prepared students. Early intervention is key. I believe we are on the cutting edge of elementary mental health by bringing in two phenomenal experts in the field.”

The presenters said they were excited that students had finally arrived on campus, and that they could meet with them. It was noted that the Care team tried to be as visible as possible to the students and staff in the rollout of the new program.

Juan Carbrillo Elementary Principal Lisa Wilberg next praised the Cabrillo PTA for its tireless work in helping to raise money in the recent Jog-A-Thon.

During member reports, Dr. Neil Goldman said he attended a District Facilities Master Planning meeting and called it a “good opportunity, a positive day,” in planning what is upcoming for the District. He added “We are privileged to be a school of choice,” but he also wanted to gather information on why Wiseburn had lost some students in the 2019/20 school year. He thought it was an “exploration worth pursuing... why did certain students not stay in the District?”

Board President JoAnne Kaneda spoke about the success of the recent STEM event involving students working with corporate mentors and said she received a request to try to involve students who may be not versed in, or “afraid” of delving into, STEM opportunities.

In his comments, Silvers spoke about the recent story about students who have considered suicide. He gave kudos to the start-up work of the CARE team, citing how important it is to have “early and successful interventions.” He also spoke about student retention and the need to face that challenge. He mentioned the recent R. H. Dana Middle School open house, and how the District teachers instill a tremendous environment for students and parents.

A somewhat skinny approval agenda faced the Board during the 70-minute meeting. Among items confirmed: Approval of new Da Vinci School Board member Karen Latuner. Wiseburn Board member Nelson Martinez said 18 candidates applied for the position, and that the process took three months. Member Israel Mora said he was “blown away” by the applicant’s skillsets. Member Roger Banuelos called the applicants “fantastic candidates.”

“She is a known entity,” Silvers said of Lautner’s selection while citing her help in rolling-out and supporting the District’s Project Lead the Way Program. “We are happy and excited to have her onboard with our partner organization.”

Also ratified was the selection of Dr. Nisha Dugal as the interim principal at Dana Middle School for the next four months or so. The Board also passed a resolution to recognize the retirement of Michael Spiwak, who retired after 24 years of service. Silvers said that there is a “gaping hole in the community” with the retirement of the longtime kindergarten teacher at Juan Cabrillo Elementary. He called Spiwak a “Wiseburn advocate, a Cabrillo advocate, and a kid advocate. He helped promote unity in the community [which is] one of the things that makes Wiseburn a special place to work.”

The next regularly scheduled Board meeting is being bumped up a day to Wednesday, Oct. 9. •

South Bay Health Plans Should Be More Affordable by Next Year

By Rob McCarthy

Covered California has announced that South Bay residents who buy their health insurance through the state's health care exchange have more to look forward to in 2020, including new financial assistance and bargains because of increased competition. Anthem Blue Cross is expanding into southwest Los Angeles County next year, giving residents a choice of 10 health plans for themselves and their families. While enrollment for 2020 won't begin until Nov. 1, consumers are encouraged to shop and compare now among the health plans. The coverage limits, co-pays and monthly premiums are listed at the Covered California website, www.coveredca.com.

Out-of-pocket monthly premiums next year should drop by 9 percent for people willing to switch their health plans to the best value, the exchange says. For those who choose not to change, their monthly premium will stay nearly identical to what they're paying now. That's the smallest increase since Covered California opened in 2014.

For the first time, middle-income families shut out of premium assistance from the government will get some financial assistance. The funding from Sacramento is intended to help those families whose health costs actually increased once Obamacare was launched.

Subsidies have been a popular feature of the consumer health care law from the beginning. Low-income residents pay as little as $1 per month for a plan.

Dec. 15 is the deadline to enroll in a plan and be insured on Jan. 1. California extends the deadline every year to Jan. 15 for Californians to avoid a penalty, though their plans don't take effect until Feb. 1. And yes, there still is a penalty for non-compliance.

Despite changes by Congress that weakened the Affordable Care Act, the state will penalize a person up to $695 and a family $2,100 for failing to meet the January enrollment deadline. The state mandate requiring that all residents be covered by a private or government health plan is new, and will be enforced by the Franchise Tax Board. It replaces the federal individual mandate, which Congress eliminated at the end of 2017.

The Affordable Care Act remains the law of the land. Congress repealed the penalty at the heart of the Affordable Care Act, also known as Obamacare. Congress repealed the penalty when it approved the federal tax code overhaul at the end of 2017. Texas has challenged the law in federal court, arguing without a penalty the law isn't valid anymore.

Employer-sponsored health plans and federal Medicare enrollees aren't affected by the rate changes or new subsidies. However, more than 200,000 people in the southwest corner of Los Angeles County use Covered California to buy their health insurance.

Though a 9 percent drop in premiums is the high average, it could be even higher in some cases. Switching to a plan in the same metal tier -- bronze or silver -- could lower the cost for South Bay families and individuals by as much as 12 percent, the exchange said.

Expect more competition next year among health plans in the South Bay. People who should benefit most include existing health plan participants whose annual household income falls below 138 percent of the federal poverty level, according to Covered California. Their premiums for basic coverage drop to $1 per member, per month. Individuals with income less than $17,237 or $35,535 for a family of four qualify for the additional financial assistance next year.

As many as 663,000 Covered California participants who currently receive federal financial assistance could pay slightly less, too, thanks to a monthly bump of $15 per household. Though a small amount, it could lower current premiums an average of 5 percent for those who qualify, the state's affordable care market coordinator explained.

Rate relief is coming for middle-income Californians who previously did not qualify for financial help because they exceeded federal income requirements. Starting next year, these health plan buyers can receive an average of $172 per household each month if they use Covered California. It predicts nearly a quarter-million state residents will qualify, including many who live in high-cost areas of the state, including parts of L.A. County. The subsidies could make health insurance more affordable and accessible to small businesses, contractors and workers, and drivers in the gig economy.

The agency offered an example of a married couple in their early 60s earning $72,000 per year. This year, they weren't eligible for any financial assistance. Under the coming changes, that couple could receive $1,700 per month in financial assistance, which would cover 70 percent of their monthly health premiums.

The Legislature recognized the plight of middle-income earners, whose health insurance plans increased steeply under the Affordable Care Act and the mandate that everyone be insured. Lawmakers extended some rate relief to those residents with an appropriation in next year's state budget. Covered California's chief applauded the move. "Thanks to these bold steps from California's leaders, rates across the state in 2020 will be on average from 2 to 5 percent lower across the state than they would have been without these policies," said Executive Director Peter V. Lee with Covered California.

The South Bay region could see the deepest savings for coverage with nine health plans returning to the fold in 2020 and a 10th insurer rejoining the competition. Anthem Blue Cross HMO withdrew from the California exchange in 2017, citing uncertainty surrounding the Affordable Care Act and lawsuits over the legality of the law.

The average rate for consumers who don't shop and switch from their current insurer will increase a minuscule one-tenth of 1 percent next year, according to rate charts released by Covered California.

The plans available through the state's exchange include four of the market leaders: Kaiser Permanente HMO, L.A. Care HMO, Blue Shield PPO and Health Net HMO. Out-of-pocket premiums next year are expected of this council's success in managing money and (with the city treasurer's guidance) investing wisely.

During reports, the recent Cuban Festival received praise from all for being a successful and well-run event. Monteiro called for the future hire of an economic development manager or director -- a standard position in other communities -- to ensure Hawthorne can benefit from the regional expansion coming into the area with the new stadium in Inglewood. Mayor Pro Tem Olivia Valentine echoed the sentiment and urged the city manager to "look into this seriously," as "all cities have economic development managers."

Pulling a consent calendar item earlier for discussion, Valentine said she was glad to see the City embark on a new noise study with a hired consultant. She wanted to ensure the updated study will include different sites from the previous one conducted in 2014, given the increased air traffic since that time. Shadbeh noted that the study will indeed expand site locations, but must conform to Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) protocols. "We cannot just pick and choose," he said of the potential study spots.

In a presentation at the beginning of the meeting, the Council recognized the 23 Hawthorne High School manufacturing and engineering students who graduated from the South Bay Workforce Investment Board's Aero-Flex Pre-Apprenticeship program. Each of the honorees received a certificate for their accomplishment. SBWIB Director Jan Vogel noted that this is the first such program in the country certified by the Department of Labor, with 288 graduates since its inception. Connecting to the relationship with Centinela Valley Union High School District, Superintendent Dr. Gregory O'Brien came to the podium wearing a "Show Me the Math" t-shirt and spoke of the importance of focusing heavily on that subject. •

You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call 855 238-5118 for information regarding the trustee's sale or visit this Internet Web site http://www.qualityloan.com, using the file number assigned to this foreclosure by the Trustee: CA-18-829901-AB. the scheduled sale. The undersigned Trustee disclaims any liability for any incorrectness of the property address or other common designation, if any, shown herein. If no street address or other common designation is shown, directions to the location of the property may be obtained by sending a written request to the beneficiary within 10 days of the date of first publication of this Notice of Sale.
