South Bay Student Breeds Exotic Leopard Geckos

By Kiersten Vannest

Leopard geckos are a special kind of patterned reptile that usually live in the Middle East and northern India. But eleven (almost twelve, she says) year-old Alyson Gibson is using her knowledge of animals and great care techniques to bring them to El Segundo.

Gibson feeds, breeds, and sells leopard geckos, raising them from egg to adulthood. "Before my mom had me, she had leopard geckos. Once I found out about that, I was like, I want a leopard gecko," she says, explaining that her mom, Shawna, had bred leopard geckos in the past and that she wanted to pick up the practice. Soon after, her mom surprised her with a leopard gecko from Petco. Her collection grew from there.

To breed them, Gibson selects the two geckos she wants to breed based on their patterns and colors. Not all leopard geckos look the same, she says. They can be different colors, stripes, and spots. Further, they can produce offspring that looks wildly different from either parent.

Once she has selected, she pairs the two geckos in the same enclosure. Gibson used to have tanks all over her room, she shares. Each gecko had its own tank that needed to be cleaned often, which she describes as a long, arduous, and often messy endeavor. Now, thanks to her stepdad, her closet has been converted into a rack system, where she can keep all her geckos in a tower-like structure and see all of them at once.

"In late winter is when the leopard gecko starts laying eggs," she says. As the females begin laying their soft, marshmallow-like eggs, Gibson carefully combs through their enclosures to find them, and once she has, she places them carefully in an incubator. Gibson then gets to decide if she wants female or male leopard geckos. She chooses by changing the temperature at which the eggs are incubated, which affects how they are born.

"Her first season, she wanted them all to be girls," says Shawna, her mom, "so we incubated them at the right temperature to make sure that they were all female offspring." She learned that season that females take longer to hatch, so this year, she chose all males.

Her geckos must be kept separate because, on occasion, they can get aggressive and fight with each other. In some instances, a leopard gecko may lose its tail in a fight. They can safely detach their tails in case of a predator picking them up from behind. Though the gecko can adapt just fine and even regrow a tail, it usually grows back very differently, slightly more deformed and discolored. Gibson doesn't wish for her geckos to go through this experience.

From here, the newly hatched babies get their own slot in the rack system, being provided with the right amount of heat, food, and what she calls a "hide." This is a type of dirt that allows them to burrow underneath to cool down. Each enclosure is specially conditioned to remain between seventy to eighty degrees, though she laughs, saying the rest of the house is not that temperature.

Gibson's geckos lay two eggs every fifteen days, which can lead to a lot of baby geckos. "We had like twenty-eight of them at one time," she says. At one point, the geckos had so many babies that they began to feed the babies to her bearded dragon, who started

Alyson Gibson with two of her specially bred leopard geckos. getting too fat from all the food. Though she loves other reptiles and her bearded dragon, she doesn't breed that pet because it can get egg-bound, she says.

Once they are ready, she sells them to lucky families looking for a beautiful leopard gecko. Prices depend on the color and pattern, as Gibson has mainly exotic and designer animals. Gibson herself gives the care instructions for the new pet and ensures that they have everything they need for a long and happy life.

As for her future plans with reptiles, Gibson is unsure of her path. "When I get older, like fourteen or fifteen, I'm probably not going to keep doing it," she says, explaining that

Film Review

El Planeta Review: A Mumblecore Gem From a New Cinematic Voice

By Morgan Rojas for Cinemacy

It's worth paying attention when director Miranda July gives her stamp of approval to an up-and-coming filmmaker. "From the very first scene my heart started to pound with that feeling of discovery," says July. "A brand new, totally modern, cinematic voice!" And who is the recipient of such praise? Argentinian artist poor person's body" are delivered in a perfect deadpan tone.

There isn't much of a plot to talk about, though. In fact, one could argue that there is really no "point" to the film. El Planeta feels very much like a cathartic personal expression for Amalia as many of the saddening events that occur in the film are based on her own

El Planeta, courtesy Utopia.

Amalia Ulman and her new film, El Planeta. Coincidentally, El Planeta is a dark comedy that feels like a step-sister to July's own Kajillionaire. Similarly, it explores the mother-daughter dynamic set against awkward hijinks and expectation hangovers.

El Planeta takes place amidst the devastation of Spain's economic crisis. After the passing of her father, amateur fashion stylist Leonor (Ulman) reunites with her eccentric and unemployed mother María (played by Amalia's real-life mom, Ale Ulman). Together, the duo work through life's mundane ups and downs. They bluff and grift their way to fund their superficially extravagant lifestyle, debt and inevitable eviction always looming.

El Planeta is Amalia's debut feature film. Its premiere at the 2021 Sundance Film Festival put Amalia and her feature on track for success, albeit, predominately in the arthouse world. Static shots and long one takes make this mumblecore darling feel like a filmed staged play, however, it never feels slighted by its simplicity. The characters make every scene come alive, which can be attributed to the film's dry comedic center. Lines like, "If I keep eating carbs I'm going to have a life with her mother, which includes suffering homelessness and hunger.

However, El Planeta is not an autobiography. The genuineness and authenticity of Amalia's script and vision give the film its depth and purpose. Ultimately, I'm with Miranda July on this one. El Planeta and Amalia Ulman are indie gems just waiting to be discovered.

Distributed by Utopia, currently playing at Landmark Westwood and available on VOD.

Crying in H Mart is the debut work of Michelle Zauner, of the band Japanese Breakfast. This New York Times Bestselling book has been on my to read list for months, and it was worth the wait. A story about many things including, family, food and most notably grief, Zauner's writing will draw you in at the start. She writes about her upbringing and how difficult it was to live up to her mother's high expectations of her, especially being an only child. She also tells about the difficulties she faced growing up one of the only Asian American kids at her school in Eugene, Oregon. She moves to the other side of the country to go to college and discovers herself to be an aspiring musician. However, with this new distance from her mother, she feels her connection to her Korean culture fading away as well.

She receives a dreadful call, her mother's diagnosis of terminal cancer, and makes the decision to come home to care for her. As Michelle is home with her mother, her desire to reconnect to her Korean culture grows. She begins her journey of relearning and embracing her Korean culture and feels most at home in H Mart, a Korean grocery store she frequented with her mother to purchase all the ingredients needed to cook her favorite comfort foods. It is in her cooking adventures that Michelle also realizes that her fiercely independent mother's way of showing love was through the meals she cooked for her. To me, I find this a touching story of grief, love, and acceptance and highly recommend it. ## Your Neighborhood Therapist

Dear Neighborhood Therapist,

I know I need to apply for a new job. I have been here a long time, and I am well respected by my bosses and colleague, but it's not taking me anywhere in terms of my career or my earnings needs and potential. I have wanted to change jobs for a long time, but now I am getting older and it feels more "urgent" and I have reached my limit. There are two problems that I am constantly running into: first, I feel like maybe I have stayed in my job too long. Every time I look at a job description for something that looks similar to what I do, I see this long list of qualifications that I do not have, and I get intimidated, and I end up not applying. Second, I think, "what if I get the job, and I don't like it at all and I'm stuck there?" I believe that you are supposed to stick it out in a job, even if you don't like it very much, and so I end up not applying. This all makes me feel even more stuck, and more horrible about myself. Is it possible to break this cycle?

- Stuck in a Job Rut, El Segundo

Dear Stuck,

Yes, it is possible to break the cycle; once you break the cycle, I suspect you will start to feel much better. First, let's have a quick look at power in the employer/employee relationship.

We live in a culture that teaches us to be submissive to employers, and you, like all of us, have been subject to this your whole life. Employers, of course, support this idea because they benefit from it: if you feel lucky to have a job, you won't complain so much about your salary or working conditions.

To further increase this sense of power imbalance, employers may use language and terminology that sounds corporate and intimidating. Sometimes, "generate and analyze financial reports" really means, "click the 'create report' button and tell your boss if the number is higher or lower than the last time you clicked the button."

That all sounds scary, but remember that if an employer is posting a job, it's because they also have a need. As someone who has stayed in your job a long time, thus proving that you are responsible enough to hold and thrive in the job, you are already steps ahead of many, many candidates.

So apply anyway, whether or not you feel you are an exact match. I promise you that people far less qualified than you are going for the same jobs. Employers do not encourage this, but they do expect it. Employers rarely require an exact match, but your consistency will certainly be appealing. And if they say no, well, that could be for dozens of reasons that have absolutely nothing to do with you.

You have a point about your fear of not liking a new job. It's possible! You might have jumped out of the frying pan and into the fire. But I am not sure I agree that you should always stick it out at a job. This is another "unwritten rule" that employers encourage, to their own benefit. If the job turns out to be not what you were promised, on what basis would you feel that you need to stick with it anyway, no matter what?

Your letter shows you've decided that the cost of staying where you are is unsustainably high and that you have decided that the risk is worth it. It's not all that different from having a surgery that will improve your life. It's scary anyway, and you are right in the middle of the scary part. Do you have people to hold your hand and help you through it? They will certainly help.

Finally, a quick pep talk: remember that if you are skilled in your field and you are a decent, reliable human being (and you have presented evidence that you are all of these things), then you are not powerless at all, so go for it.

Notice To Potential Bidders: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call (800) 280-2832 or visit this Internet Website www.auction.com, using the file number assigned to this case 18-0771-11. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Website. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. Notice To Tenant: You may have a right to purchase this property after the trustee auction pursuant to Section 2924m of the California Civil Code. If you are an "eligible tenant buyer," you can purchase the property if you match the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. If you are an "eligible bidder," you may be able to purchase the property if you exceed the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. There are three steps to exercising this right of purchase. First, 48 hours after the date of the trustee sale, you can call (800) 280-2832, or visit this internet website www.auction.com, using the file number assigned to this case 18-0771-11 to find the date on which the trustee's sale v held, the amount of the last and highest bid, and the address of the trustee. Second, you must send a written notice of intent to place a bid so that the trustee receives it no more than 15 days after the trustee's sale. Third, you must submit a bid so that the trustee receives it no more than 45 days after the trustee's sale.
