One-Time San Diego "Super Chargers" Will be Calling the South Bay Home

By Duane Plank

The Los Angeles Chargers, a franchise that played their initial season in LA back in 1960, quickly relocated to San Diego the following year, then moved back to the Los Angeles environs in 2017, will be calling El Segundo their home base, beginning in 2024.

The Chargers' brass announced earlier this week that it had selected El Segundo as the site of its new headquarters and state-of-the-art training facility. The Chargers are currently training in Orange County.

For those of you not-up-to date on the travails of the Chargers 2021 season, they are currently sitting at 4-3 in the AFC West Division, in second place behind the Raiders. And are quarterbacked by a young, rising superstar, Justin Herbert.

The new facility is expected to be completed in the spring of 2024. It will be located at the intersection of El Segundo Boulevard and Nash Street, on a 14-acre site just seven miles from SoFi Stadium in Inglewood, where the team plays its home games.

The land is owned by the Continental Development Corporation (CDC) and Mar Ventures, Inc. and is slated to be leased to the Chargers. CDC Senior vice-president of real estate Bob Tarnofsky said that "we have been working for more than a year to bring the transaction to fruition."

What makes the Chargers a good fit for El Segundo? "Spectacular location for them," Tarnofsky said, noting the proximity to LAX, which is very convenient for team members and staff, prospective free agents and visiting league dignitaries, coupled with the fact that this small town is now home to the Lakers, the Kings, and down-the-road, the Chargers. "It is unprecedented," he said.

Tarnofsky said that the selection of El Segundo to be the Chargers' home base "speaks highly of how the Chargers feel about embracing the community of El Segundo." He said the Chargers had searched "extensively" for a city to plant their flag permanently and deemed El Segundo the perfect location.

CDC, Tarnofsky said, "has been in existence for more than a half-century, and this is one of the biggest transactions that we have ever done." He noted that the Chargers are "very, very community-oriented," and believes that El Segundo residents will see ancillary benefits in town as the Chargers begin their outreach program. "They will be active in the community," Tarnofsky said.

"This is truly a feather-in-the-cap for the residents of El Segundo," concluded Tarnofsky, "a source of civic pride."

As to be expected, El Segundo politicians and city administrators touted the Chargers' decision.

Said El Segundo mayor Drew Boyles: "El Segundo has a strong tradition of fostering game-changing innovation in business and technology, and City Council is thrilled that the Chargers selected our city for the team's new headquarters and training facility." (The) City Council looks forward to learning the details of the proposed project," Boyles added, "and listening to the community's input. I believe El Segundo is the most important five square miles of Southern California's economy, and this exciting project reinforces El Segundo's legacy as a city of world champions - where big ideas take off."

Added El Segundo City manager Scott Mitnick: "The proposed land use at this location will help (the) City Council implement its vision to diversify the local El Segundo economy further," he said. "City staff has been working for several months with representatives from Continental Development Corp., Mar Ventures,

How We Re-invented the Orient Express and Found Dracula Along the Way

Article by Ben & Glinda Shipley

The authentic Paris-Istanbul Orient Express ran from the 1880s until the 1930s on a southern (Serbian) or northern (Romanian) route, depending on the latest Balkan War. After voracious reading of Agatha Christie, Graham Greene, Eric Ambler, and Ian Fleming, we were dying to take the Most Romantic Train Trip in The World, but found nothing but imitations and so-called alternate routes, at more than $3,500 a pop.

So, one of our all-time-favorite adventures started with the bright idea of booking all of the legs on our own, country by country, with each national railway. It took weeks of research and wrangling, but we ended up with:

Bruxelles-Liege (SNCB Belgium).
Liege-Cologne (Deutsche Bahn).
Cologne-Vienna (ÖBB Austria).
Vienna-Budapest (Railjet).
Budapest-Bucharest (EuroNight Ister).
Bucharest-Istanbul (Bosphor-Express).
All for less than $1,000.

The original Orient Express stopped for a luxurious spa night in Budapest, so we did too. We took another three days off in Bucharest to drive up into Transylvania in search of Dracula (Vlad really is dead, although we never saw a body). Which left three overnight sleeper trains on the Vienna, Bucharest, and Istanbul legs.

Neither of us had ever ventured east of Yugoslavia, so we had no real idea what

Willodeen by Katherine Applegate

By Cathie Hinkle-Library Assistant

Willodeen, the main character in Katherine Applegate's new novel, loves the most unlovable creatures, called "screechers." They smell bad; "Put a hundred rotten eggs in your mind. Then add some scoops of dead fish and a splash of skunk spray. You'll have the general sense of things." Her fellow villagers feel that they are monsters and need to be exterminated.

The villagers of Perchance feel this way towards the screechers because the world around them has suddenly become unkind. People are sick and dying. There are droughts and fires and, the Hummingbears, who normally migrate to Perchance annually and bring tourism and trade, are not showing up.

Willodeen believes with her whole heart that "Nature knows more than we do..." which is what her father always told her. So Willodeen, along with her new friend Connor, decide to investigate the disappearance of the Hummingbears and if the screechers play a part in it. Along the way they discover truths about themselves and grow as individuals and friends.

This is a heartwarming, timely, environmentally-themed book full of imaginative creatures that are so appealing. I could not put it down and read it in one sitting.

If you are a fan of Katherine Applegate, you will enjoy her latest. If you haven't read anything by her yet, this book would be a great place to start!

Film Review

'The Souvenir: Part II' is a Brave, Beautiful Bookend to a Personal Journey

By Ryan Rojas for cinemacy.com

Firstly, in order to properly discuss The Souvenir: Part II, we need to begin by remembering the film's predecessor.

I was absolutely floored when I first saw The Souvenir upon its release in 2019.

The film began as a simple depiction of a troubled relationship. Masterfully, it unfolded into a larger, devastating story. A portrait of how one person struggled to support, and then survive in the shadow of the other's darkness, which sought to consume and doom them both.

Upon seeing the film's final frame, my mind was blown. Then, the end credits revealed that The Souvenir would return in a second part.

prestige TV) works wonderfully here. If the story of The Souvenir was to have ended with that film, we would have been left to create the rest of her life's story in our own heads. The Souvenir: Part II provides the necessary closure and cathartic release to Julie's story, which its director feels deeply connected to resolving.

Beyond its incredible emotional honesty, the film is beautifully constructed from a cinematic level. Visually, the film is lensed through a soft, pastel world, which perfectly captures Julie in 1980s London. The Souvenir films should be admired for its visual and technical artistry just as much for its emotional storytelling.

The Souvenir: Part II, courtesy A24.

Aghast, I instantly wondered: "Where would this story go from here?"

The Souvenir: Part II, which is now playing in select theaters, answers that question.

Director Joanna Hogg continues with the semi-autobiographical story of Julie (Honor Swinton Byrne). Her devastating relationship to Anthony (Tom Burke) has ended. Nervously, she must figure out how to move forward in the aftermath of those recent tragic events. Independently, and alone.

The Souvenir focused mainly on Julie and Anthony's turbulent relationship, ending by only briefly showing Julie entering film school. The Souvenir: Part II sees Julie towards the end of school and embarking on making her thesis film. The story that Julie, the student filmmaker, decides to make, is the story of a young woman in a turbulent relationship.

Fascinatingly, Joanna Hogg—a woman who previously made a film about a woman navigating a dark chapter in her life—has now returned with a film about a woman making a film about a woman navigating a dark chapter in her life, brings an even deeper level of poignancy and meta-reflection to the storytelling.

The focus of the drama in this film is, while Julie is now liberated, can she process and make sense of her life's recent events? Still timid and soft-spoken (the white she wears liken her to a floating ghost), those around her throw unsure glances. How will she process this heavy trauma? Is she even capable of doing so?

This sequel (of which the format type is rarely seen beyond superhero movies and

However, if there's a shortcoming that I found with my experience with Part II, it's that there isn't the same effect in the grandly measured reveal that defined the first film. The Souvenir bloomed into a large and suspenseful story. Part II is more defined by seeing how, or if, she will come to terms with her past, and how, or if, she will realize her artistic vision.

Still, it's all told so bravely, and shot so beautifully, that I am enthused to recommend not just this film, but both, to everyone. Truly, they are among the most special pieces that have been shared about a person's life, and depiction of an artist's struggle, that I've seen shown on film in recent times. The Souvenir films should forever be cherished as a thing to have to remember a life-changing journey by.

The Souvenir: Part II is now playing in select theaters.

Protect Our Planet and Puppies

By Kiersten Vannest

What happened to the pandemic puppies? As pet adoptions and fosters rose while shelters emptied, some wonder what happened with the animals that were adopted during the largely work-from-home era. According to spcaLA president Madeline Bernstein, not much has changed.

Despite some press reporting that pet returns have been spiking, Bernstein reports that that statistic is slightly skewed, as many of the animals were in a foster program. Those that were adopted are by and large staying with their newfound families.

Madeline heads the animal rescue organization spcaLA, which is a separate entity from the ASPCA and specifically serves Los Angeles-based cases. As she explains, the mission of the organization is the prevention of cruelty to animals, which runs the gamut of species, from cats and dogs to pigs and rabbits.

"We really get everything... between our law enforcement work, our disaster work, and kinds of other stuff," she says. Personally, Bernstein has rescued tortoises from the organization and has dealt with cases involving horses, guinea pigs, snakes and more.

One program in particular Bernstein talks about is something started by her organization in the 90s called Animal Safety Net. This program works with domestic violence shelters to help eliminate the barrier of pet involvement. Sometimes victims are hesitant to leave because of shared animals or fear of repercussions.

Bernstein cites one case in which the abuser threatened to throw the dog out the window if the victim didn't come back home. When they didn't return, he threw the dog out the window. Animal Safety Net aims to prevent these scenarios by providing shelter for animals while victims get sorted out with the next steps, and on occasion, rescue pets from the home if the victim didn't get to take them.

In her time with the program, Bernstein has worked with cases of abuse from many situations involving a pet. From intimate partner abuse to elder abuse, she wants to expand the program to include care of animals for those in many precarious situations. With their pets in foster programs and shelters, those seeking help get the chance to focus on themselves with the relief of knowing they can keep their pet.

In addition, Bernstein adds that animal abuse is often a precursor or a sign of abuse on a See Madeline Bernstein, page 4 larger scale. Bystanders are far more likely to report cases regarding animals than with people, so peace officers often look for signs of other abuse when they investigate reports.

Though not all calls received by spcaLA are neglect and abuse cases, the number of calls about inhumane conditions has stayed relatively steady, despite some owners' best intent, says Bernstein. She mentions cases of hoarders, with too many animals in too small a space, living in piles of their feces. Though these owners, she says, will tell her that no one loves their animals as they do.

In another case, a resident decided to give free horseback rides around the neighborhood every day, much to the delight of the kids in the neighborhood. However, when spcaLA got there, it was discovered that he had never taken the saddle off the horse, ever.

On a larger scale, Bernstein stresses the importance of climate action. "Everything is connected," she says, "there used to be a flea season, and now it's all the time. Mosquitoes are having a heyday out here. Kitten season used to be one season, and now it's pretty much all year round with concentrations in during certain months."

Hibernating animals are confusing their cycles with the increasingly warm weather, and disease-carrying ticks and insects that can affect humans are multiplying in animals at much faster rates. In addition, she says the rat population in Los Angeles has exploded as they look for food.

In the case of tortoises, which she fell into rescuing, she explains that they can live over a hundred years old, but they are watched due to human intervention. Tortoises crossing roads and being picked up by well-meaning people who then can throw off their natural hibernation patterns.

All in all, Bernstein stresses action on all fronts to protect the lives of the animals around us, and especially our pets. This includes farther-reaching causes like climate change, poverty, and domestic abuse.

Finally, Bernstein leaves with a message of adopting over shopping. Having written a book about designer dogs, she says that there is a worldwide dog trade happening right now, stemming largely from social media trending dogs. Owners can purchase a trendy dog off Instagram, which she points out usually does not come from an ethical breeder and often promotes puppy mills and unhealthy conditions for the dogs.

"Most shelters have at least twenty-five percent of dogs that would be considered purebred," says Bernstein, although as rescues, they can't be verified. She is confident that everyone could find the breed of their choice between rescues and shelters through adoption. Especially, she says, if there is a certain breed trending. She says if a certified purebred is a must-have, she recommends really doing research on the breeder of choice to ensure that they are ethical and up to code.

If you are interested in helping spcaLA and its mission, donations are the best form of aid. Bernstein mentions that fundraising events, company matching, cash donations, supply donations, and volunteer work are all valuable to the organization as things open back up. •

Inc., and the Los Angeles Chargers to prepare this development application. City staff will submit recommendations to (the) Planning Commission and City Council for their review."

The project is scheduled to be considered by the Planning Commission via a public hearing on Nov. 18. The City Council will review the Planning Commission's recommendations through a separate public hearing on Dec. 7, with another "reading" anticipated to take place two weeks later.

The Charger management team was pleased with the decision to make El Segundo their permanent home. "When searching for a location to establish our hub of football and business operations, we didn't leave a single stone unturned," said owner and chairperson of the board Dean Spanos. "This process played out for more than four years because we weren't willing to settle. Good enough was not going to cut it. We wanted great, and we finally found it," Spanos said.

Continued Spanos: "To be able to develop 14 acres of prime real estate - with the proximity to LAX, SoFi Stadium, more Fortune 500 companies in the state than anywhere except San Francisco and, of course, neighbors like the Los Angeles Lakers and Los Angeles Kings - it's another major step toward building a perennial contender and further rooting ourselves in the community we serve."

Los Angeles Lakers CEO and co-owner Jeanie Buss and LA Kings President and Hockey Hall of Famer Luc Robitaille were among local sporting bigwigs to welcome the Chargers to town, issuing statements touting their satisfaction in moving their organizations to El Segundo.

"The Lakers welcome the Los Angeles Chargers, and Dean Spanos and his family, to El Segundo," said Jeanie Buss, Governor, and Co-owner of the Los Angeles Lakers. "El Segundo is a great place to be, and it's exciting that our city will now host the headquarters and training facilities of the Lakers, Kings and Chargers."

"El Segundo has been a tremendous home for the LA Kings for more than 20 years, and throughout this time, the City and the community overall have been outstanding partners," said Robitaille. "Our hockey club is now thrilled to help welcome the Chargers to the South Bay, joining us and our life-long friends, the Lakers, in this affable community we call home. The Chargers - their players, their staff - are perfectly suited to add so much to El Segundo, and we look forward to partnering with them as we continue to seek opportunities to make positive contributions to the local community."

"El Segundo is quickly becoming America's #1 small town for professional sports," CDC president and CEO Richard Lundquist said. "The Chargers, Lakers, and Kings form the 'Big Three.' These sports powerhouses contribute to our El Segundo schools and our recreation programs and energize the local economy. The Chargers are eager to become active participants of the El Segundo community. I want to welcome the Chargers to El Segundo and applaud their decision to bring their new headquarters to this great community. They are joining a growing number of companies and national organizations," said Lundquist, "who are recognizing the advantage of relocating to the South Bay, where professionals at the top of their industries want to live and work. El Segundo will soon have bragging rights that rival any other city in America."

The proposed project, designed by the Gensler Sports architecture firm, includes a three-story main building, three full-sized practice fields, on-site parking, and other state-of-the-art facilities that should allow the Chargers to compete in the NFL for years to come.

The Chargers plan to begin construction during 2022 and complete the project in time to move into their new facility prior to the start of the 2024 NFL season.

So, what will the Charger squad that will assemble to hit the gridiron in the 2024 season expect to see when they arrive at their new digs?

According to published reports, the facility will emphasize "player efficiency and movement between spaces that includes direct access to the fields from all player and coaching spaces as well as a direct connection between team meeting rooms and exterior walk-through space; specific locations within the new team headquarters include a roof-top hospitality club, full eSports gaming, and content studios and a 3,100 square foot media center."

First-year coach Brandon Staley sees the new facility as an extension of a continuing effort by the Chargers to become an elite NFL franchise.

"When our staff and I first started here, we talked a lot about possibility," Staley said. "You could just see it coming. The possibility of this team. The possibility of LA."

"The goal is for the Chargers to become the standard of excellence in the NFL. This new facility demonstrates our organization's commitment to that standard."

More on the proposed structure(s). The facility will span 145,000 square feet. There will be three natural grass fields with an artificial turf perimeter with 7,600 square feet of elevated outdoor terrace space. An additional 3,400 square foot elevated outdoor turf area and a two-lane lap pool for player rehabilitation are among the various outdoor amenities in the blueprint.

"The look, feel, and functionality of your training facility means more today than it ever has in professional sports," said Charger General Manager Tom Telesco. "Being able to create a building that can grow with technological advances - especially regarding nutritional needs, strength and performance, injury prevention, medical treatment, and game planning - is crucial to sustained success. Everyone knows the margin between wins and losses in the NFL is razor-thin. Any advantage you can create for your coaches and players, you will take it. Having a world-class training facility definitely falls into that category."

With the field area designed to accommodate bleacher seating for more than 5,000, 348 on-site parking spaces, and accommodations available for offsite parking, the Chargers will be able to host their public training camp at the El Segundo complex.

"This is much more than a training facility," said Ron Turner, Principal of Gensler Sports. "This is one of the very best buildings we've ever designed." •

was coming. The Russians were gone and had taken their ideology with them, but we had no way of knowing what kind of hangover they'd left behind.

Which came to mind when we alit in Budapest on a cold, moonless night to find a gravel path instead of a platform and no street lights anywhere. It was a black-and-gray scene straight out of Schindler's List, with silent, exhausted crowds trudging into the station and out to the street. One of the few times in our travels when we were genuinely intimidated.

The trains ranged from the Germans and Austrians (ugly, but efficient) to the Romanians and Turks (ornate, friendly, and falling apart). The farther east we travelled, the more the Communist past came to life, in massive, decrepit, concrete stations filled with loiterers who never seemed to climb onto a train. But the cities were clearly making up for lost time, with vibrant art scenes, wonderful hotels and spas, boisterous night lives, and hordes of high-performance German cars.

The food was another matter. After Viennese Schnitzels and Sachertorten, the cuisine steadily deteriorated until an abrupt reversal in Istanbul. The Ottomans have invaded—or been invaded by—nearly every country on the planet. Their former capital is truly the Culinary Crossroads of the World.

We have an ironclad rule about never eating at a restaurant with an English or tourist menu, and the Turkish script in the docks and alleyways where we ventured proved impenetrable. But the Turks are a friendly lot, and we generally drew a good-natured laugh by discreetly pointing at another diner's meal and signaling for the same. Some of the best, most exotic seafood in the world.

Agatha Christie wrote Murder on the Orient Express in Suite 411 of the Pera Palace Hotel, across the fabled Golden Horn and up a steep funicular from downtown Istanbul. Naturally, we wanted her room, but it was booked months in advance. So was Kemal Ataturk's suite, so the staff offered us Greta Garbo's former digs on the top floor. We were supposed to stay three nights, but a week raced by before we managed to tear ourselves away.

To the airport, thank goodness!

A note on Railroads: Never board a train anywhere in the world without googling and thoroughly consulting The Man in Seat Sixty-One. The Man, Mark Smith, is a rail travel genius.

A note on Times: Railroads all over the world run on 24-hour clocks (they even used to call it Railroad and Telegraph Time). So, if you show up precisely twelve hours late, like we did in Bucharest, expect an embarrassing discussion and an overnight extension in the exotic locale of your non-choice. Ever since, we've set all of our digital clocks and watches to 24-hour time. Just in case.

And while we're on the subject of Vlad the Impaler: Anyone familiar with the George-Washington-Slept-Here trope from Revolutionary America will recognize its parallel in 15th century Romania. The countryside is full of forts and castles that claim Vlad Dracula, the Volvode of Wallachia, as a former occupant.

The mystery of the Orient—the Golden Horn from Galata.

As classy as many of them are, the drab, melancholy Poenari Castle, in the remote Arges pass in the Transylvanian mountains, seemed to have best suited the moody, paranoid Count.

And as to Vlad's nickname and his adoption by Bram Stoker: The key to understanding much of European history lies in the constant, centuries-old threat of Ottoman invasion. So how do you convince a thoroughly brutal and aggressive empire to take its foreign religion and insatiable tax collectors and invade elsewhere? Vlad's solution in 1462 was to line the road from Constantinople with 18,000 impaled Turkish allies. By the time the dumbfounded Sultan Mehmet II and his troops left Targoviste, they'd lost all interest in acquiring any more Wallachian subjects.

Vlad's reputation never recovered, naturally, and set the stage for Bram Stoker to

Purrrfect Companions

Atlantis

Waiting for adoption are cats and kittens of every age, color, and personality. When you adopt, you save a life... and in turn enrich your own.

Bailey is a playful kitten who likes to go-go-go. She has a lot of energy and an upbeat personality. She is very snuggly and has the fur texture of an angora scarf. Bailey likes to play with her big brothers and does well keeping up with their tussles. Sweet by disposition, Bailey does not shy away from the rough-and-tumble. This kitty is both sweet and sassy and can hold her own in any situation.

This sweet momma is ready for her own home and to be a "kitten"! Atlantis loves to cuddle and get belly rubs, probably grateful that she does not have babies going for milk anymore! She does not do well with change, so Atlantis would do best in finding a home that does not have a lot of people coming in and out or that is too loud. She would love to be an only cat, or she might do well with another independent furry friend. Atlantis is so sweet and was the best momma, but it's her time to find a home; we hope it's with you.

Hyacinth and her brother Dandelion were born in their foster home to a teenage mama cat, who had recently been rescued from a hoarding situation. Hyacinth is a little pistol, very brave in any situation. She is initially shy, but then warms up quickly. She is sweet, enjoys petting and loves to play, play, play! She will need a playmate. Unless you have a young cat or kitten already who also needs a playmate, you will need to also adopt her brother or perhaps her mama Sable! Hyacinth and her brother Dandelion who is also up for adoption, would love to be adopted together!

Figaro (Not shown.) is a stunning, pure white young kitty with golden eyes. He was found in a car engine as a small kitten when he dropped to the street. After such a rough beginning, this beautiful boy still ended up being the most affectionate, loving kitty. When he wants attention, he'll sit at your feet and gaze up at you with his enchanting golden eyes, or will jump up in your lap for pets and cuddles. Figaro truly is the sweetest cat! He is also very playful and engaged, and enjoys hopping around on his jungle gym and chasing his laser light all over the house. As a youngster, he has tons of energy and loves snack time!

Elsie is the cutest girl you will ever meet. She is a purr machine and likes to give you lots of love. She loves to be pet and will purr the entire time. Elsie is always very calm and loves to sit on your lap. She is also fond of playing with her feather toys and wands. This intelligent kitty is great at following directions and not doing things she knows not to do. There is not much else you can ask for in a cat!

Fuego is a sweet and curious kitten. He loves playing with his brother, inspecting the plants, and finding new places to explore. The second you pick him up he starts purring. He is a playful little guy with a big personality. Fuego will greet you at the door when you come home and generally just wants to be in the same room as you. He is a gentle and sweet boy that anyone would be lucky to call their own.

Elsie

THE YELLOW DOG PROJECT.com

If you see a dog with a YELLOW RIBBON or something yellow on the leash, this is a dog who needs some space. Please do not approach this dog with your dog. Please maintain distance or give this dog and his/her person time to move out of your way.

There are many reasons why a dog may need space:

- HEALTH ISSUES
- IN TRAINING
- BEING REHABILITATED
- SCARED OR REACTIVE AROUND OTHER DOGS

THANK YOU!

Those of us who own these dogs appreciate your help and respect!
