Walker Takes Over the Leadership Reins at the Chevron El Segundo Refinery

By Duane Plank

Soon-to-be El Segundo resident Frederick Walker has once again ascended the corporate company ladder at the Chevron Corporation; he recently was selected as the new general manager at the El Segundo plant, replacing the retired Henry Kusch, at the sprawling facility that is bordered on the north by El Segundo Boulevard and has been an El Segundo institution for more than 100 years.

Walker, who began tackling his new job duties in October, and his wife Selena are currently living in Playa Vista, but Walker is confident that he will be relocating to El Segundo in the next month.

The refinery that Walker oversees blankets more than 1,000 acres of land, employs more than 1,100 workers, interfaces within the neighborhood of 500 contractors, and is touted as the largest producing oil refinery on the west coast, processing more than 276,000 barrels of crude oil per day.

The 46-year-old Walker, born and raised in Central Mississippi, lived in the Magnolia State until his mid-30's. As he was navigating through his high school years, he said that one day his father brought home a copy of the U.S. News and World Report magazine, and counseled his son to take a look at the paper, and start thinking about a career pathway, post-high school. Walker said that, at that time, chemical engineering rated highly on the job pay scale, so Walker thought "that is a good place to start." He eventually learned more about chemical engineering, noting that "I was always a math and science kind of person."

Walker attended Mississippi State University, where he grasped the opportunity to participate in the Chevron Co-op program, which, he said, was "a way for me to get some actual work experience, and see what I was getting myself into." He interviewed for the program as a freshman and spent four semesters working at the Pascagoula Refinery while he was pursuing his undergraduate degree, gaining knowledge about what chemical engineers' duties entailed in the fields of oil and energy. Basically, a paid internship. "It allowed me to get some experience and earn some money," he said, as he worked his way through college.

Walker landed a job with Chevron at the Pascagoula refinery, post-graduation, as a process engineer. He would continue to gain experience in the industry, working as an oil planning analyst, process engineering lead, operations assistant, and operations section head, and continued on the education pathway, notching an MBA from Tulane University in 2006.

In 2009, Walker's career landed him in the Golden State, where he worked as Chevron's business planning analyst for downstream manufacturing in No Cal's San Ramon. He also held posts as the operations section head and oils planning manager at the first-in-the-nation for Standard Oil Richmond refinery. He then sojourned to El Segundo to take on the job as refinery business manager.

Walker continued to strengthen his knowledge base about the intricacies of the daily operations of the Chevron Corporation, later working as a manufacturing and supply chain manager in Belle Chase, Louisiana, responsible for the company's management and manufacturing of assets in Oak Point, Louisiana, as well as Maua, Brazil.

Next on Walker's rising timeline, in 2019, he became vice-president of strategy, planning and technology for the corporation, with responsibilities including leading "downstream and chemicals strategy formation," and delving into and devising planning options for refining and marketing, lubricants, and the companies petrochemical business, as well as process and information technology.

Walker's background of successfully filling multiple roles made him an obvious candidate to fill the general manager slot in El Segundo once Kusch decided to retire.

Lily Craig, Chevron's external affairs manager, feels that the company made a great

In Sound of Metal, a Musician Loses His Hearing and, In Turn, His Identity

Morgan Rojas for cinemacy.com

As a musician, the most important instrument you have is your hearing. Sound of Metal, written and directed by Darius Marder and story by Derek Cianfrance (Blue Valentine), is a dramatic exploration of lost identity, and the challenge to accept a new normal.

Riz Ahmed plays Ruben, a heavy metal drummer who unexpectedly starts to go deaf before playing a show with his bandmate and partner, Lou (Olivia Cooke). Terrified and varied throughout the years, and Sound of Metal really puts you into the mindset of a character who never got to choose. But the takeaway here is that being deaf isn't a weakness or a handicap when viewed with the right perspective. When one sense is obstructed, it allows the others to expand and grow, leading to appreciating moments that, otherwise, may have gone unnoticed.

How hard would it be to accept the "new you" after a tragedy? Cinemacy writer Ryan Rojas explores this thought-provoking confused, Ruben learns that with only 20% of his hearing capacity left, his lifestyle as a touring musician is forced to stop. Ruben is stubborn at first to accept his new reality, which includes a residency at a hearing impaired rehabilitation facility of sorts. Led by a well-intentioned man named Joe, (Paul Raci), Ruben's struggles eventually turn into small victories as he begins to welcome the beauty in the unknown.

The way director Darius Marder works with sound, which includes the piercing ring of tinnitus and the strain of trying to understand muffled conversations, is eerily gripping. Combined with a phenomenal performance from lead Riz Ahmed (one that will certainly be discussed come awards season), Sound of Metal is an emotional film that will be hard to shake.

When I was younger, I used to wonder if living without sight or sound would be harder on me (as a film critic, this question is like Sophie's Choice). My answer has question in the latest Reflection article, now up on cinemacy.com.

Sound of Metal is being distributed by Amazon Studios and will be available to stream on Amazon Prime Video on December 4, 2020. •

Your Neighborhood Therapist

Dear Neighborhood Therapist:

My friend is a kind, funny, thoughtful human who seems increasingly captured by conspiracy theories. This has led to a lot of problems for my friend at work, and though I have tried to be patient and debunk these theories with facts, I haven't had any luck. Our relationship is good, but I am extremely worried about the effect that these beliefs are going to have on my friend's relationships with other people. Should I be as worried as I am?

– Pretty Darn Concerned in El Segundo.

Dear Pretty Darn Concerned,

Some of the most gratifying work I do is helping people stand up for their beliefs and their preferred way of living, especially when it goes against what might be considered "normal." The pursuit of "normal" is catnip for anxiety. Living up to standards that we do not set ourselves is exhausting.

Many people want to play by their own rules, and often they have good reason to do so: many of the written and unwritten rules that our society has set up are deeply unjust. Ask Rosa Parks. Rule breakers and holders of unpopular opinions make disproportionate amounts of history.

Most of us do have an unpopular opinion about something. If your friend insisted that Godfather Part 3 was the best of the series, I would urge you to be respectful even if you disagree. We are all entitled to wish the world would be certain ways.

I wish everyone accepted and celebrated the different and the unfamiliar. I wish popular kids would not be mean to unpopular kids. I wish that bullies did not exist. I wish that our government valued freelancers as much as nine-to-fivers. I wish that our culture did a better job of recognizing that a college degree is not always in everyone's best interest. I wish that our tax system valued committed partnerships as much as legal marriages.

The problem, of course, is that none of those things are true. Bullies exist from kindergarten to nursing homes. Freelancers have more trouble accessing unemployment and other benefits. Many employers prefer college graduates. I wish it wasn't this way, but it is.

I would love it if things were different, but I'd have to change an entire economic and

Budget-Friendly Tips For A Safe And Joyous Holiday 2020

(BPT) - Uncertainty continues into the 2020 holiday season, with limited travel, canceled events and strict budgets changing how Americans will celebrate this year. According to a recent Coinstar Holiday Survey, the majority of Americans said COVID-19 will influence how they celebrate the holidays.

Fortunately, by thinking outside the box and keeping a positive attitude, you can stay healthy, stretch funds and create merry moments. Let these tips inspire you to celebrate the holiday season safely and on budget:

Traditions bring comfort and hope, so rather than forgoing beloved activities due to coronavirus concerns, get creative instead. Plan a car caravan to look at holiday lights and have everyone keep a scorecard of favorite houses including winners for most creative, brightest, funniest and overall best. Set up a video chat and bake favorite holiday treats in real time from afar. Relatives can virtually tuck kids into bed by reading classic holiday books through a free digital video platform. These activities are safer to enjoy and will create meaningful memories to make the season special.

You can still have a wonderful holiday even on a tight budget. A budget-friendly option is to make it a homemade holiday this year. Face masks and hand sanitizer are great stocking stuffers that you can make and will be appreciated, especially this year. Patterns are readily available to make face masks and you can find recipes online for creating custom hand sanitizer. Another idea is to choose all handmade gifts from Etsy or local artists in your area, so you can give unique presents

Don't Worry. It's Just a Holiday Reminder from the Hawthorne Police Department.

If the Sarge isn't writing a ticket, can you guess what it might be? During the holidays, we want to give everyone an extra reminder to hide any valuables if left in their vehicles by patrolling parked cars and leaving a Vehicle Crime Prevention Report Card. Items left in plain sight could result in someone "borrowing" them without your permission. Take the extra moment to hide any treasures and double check your doors. Huber's Hiccups

News for the City of Good Neighbors from an Old Guy named Norb Huber

We NEED Christmas

Judging by the early start to everything related to Christmas this year, most Americans really want something cheerful and bright to put an end to this 2020 calendar. For many of us in past years, Christmas has been parties and decorating and food and shopping and school programs and music and all of that stuff. We all seemed to like the fun things we did during Decembers past. This year is different. This year we really could use more than all of the fun and frolicking. We all could use something we can hang onto, something we can trust that is not going to change. We could use some hope and reassurance that there is a solid truth. That is exactly what Christmas means. God sent his Son into the world as a baby. That little baby would become the Savior of the world. God so loved the world that he sent his son to die for us. Jesus saves us from sin and death. He gives us new life, eternal life. That is the great message, the great truth that is given to us. That saving faith in a Savior born in a lonely manger over 2000 years ago is what we can hold onto in this ever changing world. God's love never fails. His love never changes with a virus or an election or wildfires or civil unrest. Yes, we can celebrate and have our Christmas fun with social distancing, masks and Zoom parties. But, more importantly we can relax, have a cold one, and know without a doubt that there is someone who we can count on. Since we have received the greatest gift, we should share that love with others. Give of your time and energy to help a family member, an elderly neighbor, a person in need. We really do NEED Christmas this year. We NEED the love that came down to us in baby Jesus. Enjoy the season friends and critics, one and all.

THE NATIVITY BUSINESS

If you have been one of my loyal readers, you know that me and my old lady have owned Outdoor Nativity Store for the past 13 years. It has been a real joy to share my joy of Christmas with so many Christians around the world. This year's sales have been amazing. We were not prepared for so many orders for our sets. We have been working seven days a week in order to stay somewhat up to meeting the demand. Again, it's always fun to talk to some of our customers and see some of their displays via photos. The sales prevented me from writing my rambling run together rudimentary rash of ruminations last week. I missed you all. I hope you all had a wonderful Thanksgiving. Live life boldly my friends, even if you are confined to your homes. Love your spouse, even if you are tired of having your old man around the house. Until next time, have a cold one!

selection when tabbing Walker. "Well you know, I hated to see Henry Kusch retire," she emailed. "He was such an awesome general manager and a great guy, too! But I cannot imagine a better new general manager than Fredrick Walker. He is wicked smart, thoughtful, empathetic, and just plain cares about people. And if that were not enough, he's got a great sense of humor and an engaging smile."

Jeff Wilson, the El Segundo refinery manager of corporate affairs, emailed "I have known Fredrick since he first worked in El Segundo and despite his many significant strategic leadership roles within Chevron since that time, he remains one of the most humble, thoughtful, accessible and engaging individuals I have worked with. In these challenging and uncertain times, we are truly blessed to have Fredrick at the helm." Continued Wilson: "Upon his return as General Manager, Fredrick made it an absolute priority to introduce himself to our refinery family conducting weekly "Ask Fredrick" web calls that averaged 500-600 employees. I know he also took great delight in spending time recently with our Community Advisory Panel (CAP) where nearly our entire virtual CAP meeting was centered around getting to know Fredrick, his family, his work history and vision for the future."

Walker said that working his way up the ranks has well prepared him for his new job. He said that over the years working for Chevron, "you get a chance to talk about the jobs that interest you, not only the next job, but where you are targeting...so I had been looking to do a job like this for several years, had it on my radar...and other people had me on their radar to become a general manager. Through dialogue and feedback from others," he said, "I was offered the opportunity...a great opportunity for me, a big challenge, but one that I am looking forward to."

Walker said that, because he was a long-time employee of Chevron, the interview process was different from the one that another external job seeker would partake in. He said that the interview process was more tilted towards "the evaluations that you go through year-to-year," calling it "a multi-year interview" that embodied the totality of the work Walker had done for the company. He said that top executives, as they look to develop future general managers, "are constantly looking in the pipeline" for promotable candidates.

Said Walker: "I am "very excited and humbled by the opportunity."

No story in the fall of 2020 would be complete without a thought on the scourge of COVID-19 and its effects on the workplace and employee safety. If Walker had taken his new job a year ago, his responsibilities would have been much different. "The way we have had to adjust to keep a 24-7-hour facility operating safely, reliably, and in an environmentally sound way," Walker said, is paramount. "While you are also having to protect the health of those essential workers" who must show-up on the job site, unable to telecommute because of their job requirements. If COVID-19 wasn't raging, Walker said normally he would be canvassing the campus, shaking hands, rallying the troops, greeting people he hadn't seen since his prior stint in El Segundo, or introducing himself to employees that he hadn't met.

But in today's pandemic atmosphere, Walker is leveraging the WebEx video platform to communicate with his charges, with sometimes 400-500 employees per session in the refinery and working from home, "engaging and talking. "You have to keep people engaged and informed," he said, especially during times of uncertainty or unusual circumstances. It is a great way for employees, both working from home and at the facility, to ask questions of leadership, he said, mitigating somewhat the cultural system. I'm just not strong enough. Very few of us are (except, of course, for the Rosa Parks' of this world).

Can your friend change reality? If yes, great - do it, problem solved. Is your friend especially skilled at finding like-minded individuals and keeping the facts at bay for years or decades? Maybe they'll get lucky! On the other hand, if your friend is like the vast majority of us, then reality will eventually come crashing in one way or another. Ignoring the facts of the world only works if you can get away with it forever. It's a very low-percentage shot.

So yes, worry. It is going to be costly to your friend, and that stinks. But also do your best uncertainty of what the future may hold and the certainty of "constant change."

When Walker is not tending to his responsibilities at Chevron, he and his wife Selena like to get out-and-about, with both being avid runners who have participated in several half marathons. Walker is a big fan of the New Orleans Saints and is looking forward to, when allowed, attending a Ram or Charger game at Inglewood's SoFi Stadium. When asked about other outside interests, Walker paused, chuckled, and said he had recently asked his wife, who are very recent empty nesters, "what are our hobbies?"

I guess running the local Chevron refinery, a key cog in the Chevron empire, does not leave a lot of "hobby time," right? • while supporting small businesses.

Even with fewer in-person gatherings and reduced gift giving this season, most people have increased expenses during the holiday season. Cashing in spare change is a good way to stretch your budget. Research shows Americans with spare change at home estimate that they have on average $113 in and around their homes. These funds can be used to buy gifts or apply to other holiday expenses. Coinstar kiosks found at most grocery stores are an easy way to convert loose change for cash, a no-fee eGift card or tax-deductible charity donation.

According to the Coinstar Holiday Survey, two in five Americans who say their holiday will be different due to COVID-19 say they do not plan to travel or attend in-person gatherings. To enjoy the holidays safely, consider a virtual gift exchange with friends or family. Drop off or mail gifts and plan a time for everyone to video chat and open presents together. Get dressed in your favorite holiday attire to make the event feel special, whether that's festive formal wear or ugly sweaters and sweats. Then, take turns opening gifts and feel the joy.

Rather than a traditional present, consider alternative gifts that show you care. Do you have a talent that would benefit others, such as tutoring a friend's child who is studying remotely? Could you drop off a meal for a senior who's homebound? Could you donate a snack basket for hard-working delivery personnel? Lastly, instead of a present, you could make a donation in the recipient's name to a charity close to that person's heart.

All of these ideas can help you maximize the holiday season, but if you still long to celebrate in person, consider planning a gathering for later in 2021. According to the survey, about half said they would consider "Christmas in July" in 2021 for in-person celebrations. So, whether it's a summer Christmas event, an early Friendsgiving or another winter holiday, it's something to look forward to once it's safe again. Send out "save the date" invitations and put your creative juices to work for a summer get-together. •

Purrrfect Companions

Ventura and Carlsbad

This holiday season consider bringing a little more love to your home when you adopt a wonderful cat or kitten. If you are unable to adopt at this time, consider fostering or Ventura and Carlsbad are a bonded pair of sweet, adorable kittens. Ventura is an adventurous orange tabby boy and Carlsbad is a cuddly buff tabby girl. They are both super playful and curious. They love to play, wrestle with each other, and bat around balls and other toys. Climbing and exploring everything that they can are a few of their favorite pastimes. Ventura will climb up on cabinets to see what is in them. Carlsbad will climb up under a blanket that is on you to see what is there and cuddle next to you. Carlsbad is one of the softest kitties you will ever feel. Love, joy, and lots of purrs is what they will offer in return for a few pets. Ventura and Carlsbad do need to be adopted together as they cannot be separated.

Popeye kept chasing her around trying to do you know what, so Olive Oil dumped him. She ran into her foster's house; Popeye certainly did not take very good care of her. She has a bad eye; it is an old injury according to the vet and is not hurting her. So, we decided to leave her eye as is; it adds to her character! Olive Oil is still young and a real sweetheart. She plays well with the resident cat and is such a joy to be with.

Nebula is funny, affectionate, energetic, cuddly, curious, charming and oh so sweet! Nebula is the runt of her litter and although she is small in size, she is big on personality. Nebula loves meeting new people and animals and making new friends. She is confident and playful and would do well with children

Tristan is a spunky, funny, sweet boy who is a joy to have around. He sleeps in the most adorable positions, usually with his belly up and his legs splayed in different directions. His days are equally divided into napping, playing with other kittens, and cuddling with his foster mom. Tristan enjoys playing and wrestling with his foster siblings and is also good about playing on his own. Tristan is a young kitty who needs to be adopted together with one of his foster siblings, Koba, Neo, Morpheus, or Venus or into a home with another friendly cat he can socialize with Optimus is a gorgeous all black teen with the most delicate white ring around his paws. He loves playing and is beginning to share his mischievous and curious side. As the runt of the litter, he was a bit bullied and will gain confidence in a new home. Optimus should go to an experienced cat owner who can continue to work at socializing him. When frightened he may hiss, but the next minute he craves treats and attention. He would love to be adopted with one of his brothers, Bumblebee or Megatron.

Saffron is a sweet little girl who loves to be given affection and is blossoming more and more every day. She is interested in bonding with new people and warms up quickly. Saffron is a stunning calico point Siamese with washes of gray and bursts of orange on a very soft coat that will likely develop with age. If you are looking for a little sweetheart friend who you can show the joys of home life to, Saffron is your girl. Saffron is playful and engaging with toys and loves to chase anything that bounces.

She has a great time with cardboard boxes, popping out to surprise a friend or biting the edges for fun. Since she is young and playful, she will need to be adopted with a buddy. She is a little picky about her animal friends and would do best being adopted with a confirmed friend. Saffron has great bonds with Rutabaga and Terragon.

With our city and state shut down, we are faced with the delicate balance to protect our fellow humans from the spread of COVID-19, while continuing our mission of saving the most vulnerable victims of the homeless cat crisis. We know that these are hard times for everyone. If you can give a little, it will go a long way. They are still counting on us during these difficult times. Your tax-deductible donations for the rescue and care of our cats and kittens can be made through our website or by sending a check payable to Kitten Rescue, 914 Westwood Blvd. #583, Los Angeles, CA 90024.

Saving one animal won't change the world, but the world will surely change for that animal. •
